How difficult a subject is the temperance question to write about, in view of the oceans and the public at large, that he has now in store of ink and tons of paper that have been used a full stock of in its discussion. Is there anything new Fresh and Seasonable Goods, SPRING MEETING that can be written? is there anything old that can be presented with a new face. To Flour, Fish, Molasses, Sugars, Teas, these questions the reply must be no! But then the old evil is to day's evil; the old effeets are seen all around us; the baneful influences that show themselces in society were exhibited in precisely the same form centuries ago, and these to day must be met and i possible exercised even though there be no new weapons at hand with which to reach

Because the destructive insects that destroyed our foliage and our fruits last year and many past years were treated with such remedies against their ravages as were to be had, is no sane reasson why similar remedies should not be used now. And therefore, though in the old fashion, and with the old terms and the well-worn arguments, we must write about and fight against the evil of in temperance. But there is another consideration Those who were in danger last year have had their numbers added to by those who are entering upon the dangerous period of life lying between youth and manhood To these the evils and seductions of intemperance are presented just as they were presented to parents and friends in years gone by They came in the same guise, threaten the same effect and to these persons the old arguments are new arguments, and the arraignment of alcohol in the light of its true nature is a novel arraignment to them. Remembering these things, let the speakers not forget to speak; let the writers not grow weary of writing, however distasteful repetitions may Colored Gold Vast and important interests are a etake. A coming country demands our assistance in repressing an evil that if unmet will blast the good of that country. The future depends upon the action of the now the ræins of success, of triumph in the future, if such ræans there be, must be inspired by the work and faith of the temperance advocates of the present.

SIR GARNET WOLESLEY AND TEMPER-ANCE.—Sir Garnet Wolseley has written a letter full of sound common sense to the Grantham Temperance Association in reply to a communication congratulating him on his recent visit to that borough. " Nearly all the crime in our army, writes Sir Garnet, "can be treed to intoxication, and I have always found that when with any army or body of troops in the field there was no issue of spirits, and when their use was prohibited, the health as well as the conduct of the men were all that could be wished for.' General Sir Garnet Wolseley (he was on the staff in Canada in 1863-64) might also have told his correspondents at Grantham that the tremendous army raised by the North to combat secession and which when Richmond fell and the Confederate cause went up, was nearly a million strong, was, so far as the private soldiers were concerned, wholly and entirely a teetotal army. No spirits, no wine, not so much as a glass of lager beer, could the privates illicitly obtain. That I can vouch for from personal observation, was the case with the Grand Army of the Potomac. The officers, on the other hand, could procure pretty well what they liked in the way of stimulants, from champagne down to the brisk and beaming cocktail. Occasionally cunning devices were re-sorted to for the smuggling of whiskey into The spirits were sometimes contained in a square in can, disguised with calf sides and back and gilt sides and lettering as a hymn book; but these alcoholic hymnals were, as a rule, discovered and confiscated by the Provost-Marshal and his assistants; and, "O, sir," wrote a bereaved private to Washington newspaper, "it's hard—it is, indeed, to see the stuff we're longing for staggering about with a pair of shoulderstraps on." Shoulder-straps were the distinctive badge of officers' rank in the Federal army .- G. A. Sala, in London Illustrated signs of a temperance revival in Summerside. It is cheering te see that the movement is headed by young men. Nothing is to us sadder than to see fine young fellows setting Improved Ithaca Horse Dumpout in life with good prospects of success be-fore them deliberately throwing away their chances by acquiring a love of strong drink. The price that they pay for their drinks is enormous—is out of all reason. Almost everything that makes life enjoyable and everything that makes life enjoyable and useeverything that makes it respectable and useful is paid by these unthicking men for a and certainly not lasting excitement. The

By far the greater part of that price is not money but things infinitely more valuable, which money cannot buy. It too often happens that the strong men, the pleasant fellows, who have the gift of leadership, use their talents and their influence to tempt their weaker companions to destruction. They may do it thoughtlessly and without any evil intention, but they help to ruin them all the same, and they cannot get rid of the responsibility for the harm they do, and for the lives they spoil by their example. It is, we say, cheering to see that the young men of Summerside have taken thought and that some of them, instead of leading their friends and acquaintances on the path to unhapping the same acquaintances on the path to unhapping the same acquaintances on the path to unhapping the same acquaintance of the same acquaintances on the path to unhapping the same acquaintance of the same acquaintances on the path to unhapping the same acquaintance of the same acquaintance of the same acquaintance on the path to unhapping the same acquaintance of and acquaintances on the path to unhappiness and ruin, are nobly helping them to keep right and to reform. MONTREAL, June 10.—A painful case is now before the Superior Court, in which Thomas Allan, a well known traveller, is suing his wife, who is the mother of eleven children, for separation de bien et de corps, on the ground of her being addicted to drink.
