this city and hereabouts offered wine to their guests, and of the callers at these places hardly one in twenty took wine.

Such a fact challenges admiration. It a sad way to begin the New Year by a social indulgence of that social evil which does so much harm in society. The total abstractice reform did an immense work when it banished from a majority of the sideboards and th social tables the decanter; a hold was then loosened on society which the evil has been ever striving to regain. Driven into the bar-rooms, the traffic and the indulgence has consent. All bil's due the said firm will be coleven there worked terrible injury. By the aid of law it is being driven into still dense resorts Let us etrive, by keeping the public conscience live on the subject, to prevent a return to the old state of things when intoxicating liquors were among the " home hos

What are our Lodges the country over de ing? Are they up and alive to the public demands upon them for action? Are they working so as to keep burning the fire of a pure zeal in the hearts of their member- and THE subscriber offers for sale a Lot of Land, containing 100 acres, situate in the Land, containing 100 acres, situate in the Parish of Kent, in the Holmes Settlement, so called on the road leading from the River St. John to the Mineral Spring. The following is, we think, worthy of a place in the column. It is a practical appeal that should attract the attention of some. We find it under the caption of These desirous of a long stay in this veil of tears,

"Gin-dripers liver ":-The mos frequent cause of this complaint be expected. duced into he stomach in the ordinary way, it nearly il passes through the liver. Undiluted spiles are much more injurious than when mixed with water, and produce greater irritation. Alcohol consumed as wine or beer is farless destructive to the liver than when take in the form of ardent spirits. A hot climat intensifies all the vicious effects ed, but laer they are sufficiently well marked. At first the liver gets slightly only of alcohol. The symptoms of cirrhosis of and the patient suffers from pain in the right side, indigestion, wind, and costive bowels. He is occasionally feverieb, his ekin is hot and dry, and he has a peculiar unhealthy sallow look, which he probably fails to notice, but which is sufficiently obvious to his friends, The necessity for making a change in his habits is forced upon his attention, and for Kennedy's Medica: Discovery a week or two he is under the doctor's or ders, and not feeling able to drink any more, he consents to follow a restricted diet, and to take a course of purgatives. Soon the most prominent symptoms are relieved, he fancies himself well again, and quickly returns to his old habits Gradually, however, he notices that he is getting thinner and weaker, and occasionally he has a good deal of pain in his side. He is nervous and out of sorts. He has no longer the pluck he used to have; first his friends notice it, and then he gradually becomes aware of it himself. He finds that he is not "fit for business," and he is afraid to see people The patient has occasional attacks of diarrhoea, his appetite fails, and the emaciation and debility increase. He tries all kinds of treatment, but never sticks to one for long at a time. He consults exacyone of any to but derives little if any benefit from their advice. would give up the drink if he could, but he can't. His self-reliance is gone, the alcohol has stolen away his will, and he is utterly incapable of giving up the dangerous fascination. He will take an oath to day that he will never touch another drop of spirits, and will probably break it to-morrow. Sometimes he wishes that some one would lock him up in an asylum, or that by some chance bim up in an asylum, or that by some chance or other he could have a six months' imprisonment, but he never feels able to put himself under restraint. After a time the liver gets smaller, and this, instead of being a good sign, is a bad one, for it is contracting. He would willingly enough consent to knock off drink now, but it is too late; the mischief is done, the liver is in a state of cirr- Cor Main and Queen Streets hoeis, and no medicine can restore it to its natural condition. Is there any remedy for this horrible complaint? Yes, one, teetotal ism-absolute abstinence from alcoholic liquors of all kinds. This remedy must be applied early. If he waits till his liver has undergone serious organic change, it is too late. No half-measures will suffice; he must give up drink of all kinds. If he does this he will recover; but if he goes on in his old plan an early and painful death is the inevitable consequence.—Family Physician.

Depravity's Depth.—An old man living in this city, says the Gleyeland Leader, until recently depended upon his daughter for support. He is a slave to the whiskey bottle and is a common loafer, eleeping in some gutter or saloon at night, only going home when in need of money to buy more liquor. She was picked up badly injured, and carried to the pospital. Her fall was too much for her pospital. Her fall was too much for her firail system, weakened and run down by unceasing toil, poor food, cheerless days and enights of sorrow. For several days she tossed in fever, and finally died. The father missed her doils nuttoned for two and the father missed her doils nuttoned for two and the father and soll of the father missed her doils nuttoned for two and the father and soll of the father and soll missed her daily puttance for rum, and pawned the sewing machine to buy more liquor.

The dead girl was buried quietly, no one going to the paupers' graveyard except the un-dertakers and the father. The ladies who dired neighbors to the girl made a beautiful it the father to be placed there in the grave.
That wreath he sold for liquor. At night, when the rum cravings came on strongest, the old man secured a horse and wagon, drove to the grave where his dead daughter was buried, dug up the earth, tore the emaciated body from its resting place, and coniated body from its resting place, and conveyed it away to the storage room of a medi-cal college. He sold it there for a miserable pittance—a few dollars—with which he returned to his cups. With the price of his daughter's body he is even now debauching
