WASHINGTON LETTER. (From our own Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 12, 1882. Washington is now a deserted village. The President, Congress, most of the Cabinet, all of fashion, and the lobby have departed. Many chiefs of Bureau and a large number of clerks are away on summer vacations. The absence is conspicuous on the streets, in the parks, in the hotels, and in the air. Well, let them alone and they will come home and bring their — behind them." The summer vacation will be much briefer than usual. Congress will assemble for a short sharp ses sion in less than four months, and butterfly Washington will be back from seaside and mountain in less than half that time.

It will be remembered that Congress granted the use of the Rotunda of the Capitol for a Fair and Exposition to raise funds for a statue to the memory of Garfield. The enterprise is in the hands of the army of the Cumberland. A Garfield monument committee has been formed. The Fair is to be a National Industrial and Art Exposition, and medals and prizes will be awarded by special committees according to the rules adopted by the Centennial Exposition of 1876.

The Fair will commence on the 25th of Nober and continue until the third of Dember. It is expected that the attendance will be very large, and that a large addition will be made to the Garfield Monument Fund. The art exhibits, from all that can be learned will be numerous and of a character such as has not often been collected in this country. Several hundred new Government clerks have recently been appointed—all of whom are males. The applications of females have been ignored, and Secretary Teller is known to be opposed to their appointment, giving as a reason that they are not as efficient as the males and that their presence in the Department is corrupting. There was a Wo-man's Indignation Meeting held at the Cor-coran Building last night. There were probably 100 in attendance, from the young, fresh looking girl to the aged care-worn matron whose hair had grown gray with trouble and toil. Many prominent ladies who had expressed themselves in sympathy with the idea and had promised to come and help engineer the movement, failed to put in an appearance. Mrs. Charlotte Smith, as chairman, announced the object of the meeting which was to take practical cognizance of the exclusion of women from the Departments. She stated on the authority of members of Congress whom she named that Secretary Teller objected to the appointment of women on the grounds that they corrupted the departments and were inefficient as comwomen on the grounds that they corrupted the departments and were inefficient as compared with men. She said that she had never asked a favor from the Government berself, and therefore was perfectly disinterested in the matter. As a matter of principle, however, she thought it incumbent upon every woman to protest against the exclusion of women from the Government service on the sole ground of sex. As to the other charges she thought a woman Jone, without the assistance of men could not do much corrupting. Addresses were also delivered by Mrs. Greene and Mrs. Roberts. Many affecting instances were related by ladies who had waited in Washington for months expecting appointments, and not dreaming that the announcement would be made at the last hour that no woman need apply.

LONDON LETTER.

LONDON, ENGLAND, July 31, 1882.

If ever there was a stroke of diplomacy ful of the spirit of prophecy, it was surely Lord Beaconsfield's purchase of Ismail's shares in the Suez Canal, for in giving Great Britan a vested interest in the undertaking he furnished her with a reason, that could not have been rendered logical by merely indicating the immense percentage of British tonnage that used the canal, for claiming the right to control that highway to Iodia against the whole world, should the occasion to July 200 ever arise. During the first six months on the receipts in round numbers twenty-one and a quarter millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months on the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months number of ships amounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months number of ships amounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months number of ships amounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months unmeer of ships mounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-four and a half millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months number of ships mounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-one and a quarter millions of frances. In 1881, the first six months number of ships amounted to 1,334, and the receipts to twenty-one to those who are watching with oonliciting feelings, the almost efversib industry of ship-four and a half millions of frances. This increase of figures is absolutely startling, even to those who are watching with conflicting feelings, the almost efversib industry of ships. crease of figures is absolutely startling, even to those who are watching with conflicting feelings, the almost feverish industry of ship-building yards; but the Englishman finds a significance in the canal quite outside its value as a waterway for the world when he learns that of the immense mass of shipping which annually traverses that narrow strip of water, 80 per cent. of it is the property of British owners. The control they claim to exert needs no better advocacy than this bare fact supplies. Such is the use now made of the Sucy Capal that when it is free as a chanthe Suez Canal that, when it is free as a channel, there is probably no hour of the day when ships representing by freight and hulls an aggregate value of two to three millions of pounds sterling, eighty per cent. of the who'e being British, may not be found upon the slender band of water, 100 miles long, that If it be true that the fortunes of an Empire may turn upon the saving of a single day, assuredly those who wish to believe that the Suez Canal is by no means the important feature of English Imperial life that the majority of the nation insists upon considering it, must not object to be told that either they have no knowledge of the subject they deliver opinions on, or that they wilfully blind their eyes to a truth perceptible to the humblest order of understanding. Long ago it should have been seen by English politicians, as it must have been seen by English navigators, that a short cut to India would not only immensely improve the security of our posseswithin the reach of this country's powerful arm, but would save a very great deal of human suffering. In the days of the Cape route, troops, whether outward or homeward bound, languished in great numbers under serious forms of illness, arising from crowded sleeping accommodation, and protracted abscence from land. No one who has inspected tro 'tween decks of a transport filled with theops can forget the night scene of hundreds of men huddled in their sleep upon the deck, in an atmosphere thickened by rows of ham-mocks swinging over their heads, and render-ed fetid by the respirations of the great and motionless company. But even in the respect of the conveyance of troops, the canal, to an extent that is inconceivable, does more than shortening them; it narrows the possi-bilities of ship-wreck, and practically anni-hilates those old forms of suffering one reads of in narratives of troop-ships delayed at sea —the running short of provisions and fresh water, and the many horrors which follow disaster to the spars or machinery of a ship in mid-ocean and alone.

The Royal Gazette of last week contains the new Crown Land Timber Regulations.
The upset mileage is placed at eight dollars, in addition to which are the following fees: For spruce and pine saw logs, per thou-

For pine, hardwood or hacmatac timber per ton, For cedar logs per thousand superficial 2 cents each 3 cents each

For shingles,

And for all other descriptions of lumber, such as ship timber, knees, spiling, &c, &c., twelve and one-half per cent. of the market value thereof at the mill, place of shipment, or place of consumption in the Province.

The annual sale is to take place this year on the 29th August, inst., at Fredericton. THE ARMIES OF ENGLAND AND EGYPT .-

An interesting article appeared in the St. Petersburg Golos on the armies of England and Egypt. It proves that Arabi Pasha could produce 60,000 men, including 10,000

Gentlemen's Goods, reserves and 30,000 irregular troops; whereas England at the present moment could hardly bring 20,000 European soldiers into action, as none could be taken from Ireland, and Government would probably not run the risk of weakening its Mediterranean garrisons. India could only supply 5,000 good men, as probably no native troops would be called at. In conclusion, the Goles remarks that gland can only be sure of success if els prepares for a campaign and not for a expedition.

The next session of the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada will begin in the Centenary Church in Hamilton, Ont., on Wednesday, the sixth day of September next.
