Agriculture.

THE MANURE HARVEST .- In the midst of the harvest of grain, and grass, and tubers, we must not forget the compost heap, in which we garner and store the unsowed crops of a future season. The saying that anything that grows in one summer, will rot before the next, is a safe guide in collecting vegetable matter for the compost heap. When sods, muck, and weeds form a part of the heap, it is not alone the material which the heap, it is not alone the material which we are assiduous in collecting and putting into the heap, that constitutes its whole value.

The [fermentation] induced by the dung and liquid manure, and the action of the time or ashes added, work upon the earth, adhering to the roots of the weeds and forming a considerable part of both sods and muck, and develop an admirable quality of plant food. Hence this element of the compost heap, which is generally overlooked as possessing any special value, should never be wanting. It has, moreover, its own offices to perform, in promoting decay, in the formation of humus, and in preserving, looking up, and holding on to valuable ingredients of plant
