WE do not think the Legislative Council has added to its strength in the country by its action in throwing out the bill to vest power in the Municipal Councils to exempt industries from taxation. The bills had been thoroughly discussed in the popular branch, and certainly all the arguments that could be were then presented against it. We very much regret the result. The measure was one not only proper in itself but was of a class of legislation which in the next few years must be agitated and endorsed by the Legislature. When only a county here and there was incorporated it was of course impossible to give the municipalities general powers, but now, when the incorporation of the counties has become general, there are certain extensions of power which they may justly claim. The Municipal Councils are, of course, becoming more and more intelligent sponsibilities committed to them by law. While they have not become less economical or careful of the public monies over which they hold control-we speak, of course, more particularly from our knowledge of the Counso far as practicable the County Councils localities. Hence the bill now under notice was, we think, a wise one. Granted only that Councillors have ordinary discretion and Their ears;
