Poetry.

Oh. Go Away! With a bumpy swish and a curdled roar, Sweet Mary's churn goes drumming; Young Reuben leans on the low half-door And hopes that the butter's coming; Then sighs and sighs and drops his eyes-What words can his feelings utter? "Oh, drop me down in the churn," he cries, the carriage was a costly one. "And make me into butter!" She rests her hands, and gazing stands At sound of his words' vagary ; Then plies the staff with a lightsome laugh-

"Oh, go away," says Mary. f a maiden's word means aught, they say, The opposite sense is in it; So Reuben finds in her "go away." A "just come in a minute." I hope," says he, "I may make so free," With a grin and a nervous stutter, My answer should be to your ears," says she "If I could but leave the butter." His arm on the shelf that holds the delf,

"Shall I go to her side? Shall I dare her pride?" "Oh, go away," says Mary. He takes the hint, and he takes a kirs With fears and inward quaking; She does not take what be takes amiss. Nor seem in an awful taking. Sweet kisses he takes so loud and fast That he takes her breath completely He takes her tight in his arms at last, And still she takes it sweetly. The heart of the boy is wild with joy

He has wen her-his bride, his fairy I'll go outright for the ring to-night.

"Oh, go away," says Mary.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, December 30, 1882.
Late Saturday night, when the stores and streets of Washington were thronged with purchasers of holiday goods, a brilliant light was seen in the dome of the Capital, indicating that Congress was holding a night session. The Senate was sitting up with the civil service bill, and it held its vigils until nearly midnight. The bill has since passed the Senate, but the prospect for really practical and reformative civil service legislation is not good. The evil is great, but the country not good. The evil is great, but the country is greater, and one goes his way to his farm, and another to his merchandise, while a third ask: who is civil service and what does he want with reform? The question stated very briefly and as conscientiously as if your correspondent were under oath is this:—The United States government has in its employ about 100,000 clerks, half of whom, more or less, are supernumeraries for the reason that they have no necessary work to do. They all, it is true, make some pretence to work, but a critical examination of their apparent employment will reveal that their so-called work has been invented for them. Their oc-

"DO LIKEWISE."

That isn't the question,' suggested his wife, speaking as considerately as possible. 'It would be better, Peter, if you would treat people respectfully. I do not wonder that the man was repulsed by your rudeness.'

It was Saturday afternoon, and Peter was in his shop thinking, when someone entered. He looked up and saw Mr.

Wilkins.

How'd ye do?' said the capitalist. 'How'd ye do?' returned the builder. 'You are not very busy, I take it,' added Wilkins.

'Peter,' said his wife to him, one evening, 'do you know you have lost a good job by offending Mr. Graham?'

Peter looked up from his paper and asked what he meant.

'I mean,' she replied, 'that Mr. Graham has hired Leavit to build his new house.'

'Well—what of it?' said Peter rather crustily.

'Well, said Wikins, 'I am in want in do you before; and should like to employ you. I meant to have employed you before; and perhaps you can imagine why I did not. However,' he added, as he saw Peter's countenance fall, 'there's no need of referring to that only for the lesson it teaches. I felt the cut of your rudeness very deeply; and the more so because I could not see wherein I had given any occasion for it.'

"Bah!" cried Peter, with a snap of his finger, "don't talk of politeness in business. If I were to bother myself to be polite to everyone who happened to call on me, I should have my hands full."
"I think it would pay," ventured the wife.

Peter poohed at the idea, and then told his wife.
