By request we publish the following:—

On Thursday evening last this community was shocked by the sad intelligence that one of its oldest and most respected citizens had dropped dead while on his way home, and when within a few rods of his door. Deceased was born at Hampton, Kings County, N. B., on April 16th, 1805, and was consequently in his 78th year. He was the son of a Loyalist father, who came to New Brunswick from New York during the latter part of the last century. The deceased came to Canterbury Station in 1865. For 16 years he held the office of J. P., and for several years of that time, was Parish Court Commissioner. He was highly respected by all who knew him. For many years he was a member of the Methodist congregation, trustee board and class, and his loss will be keenly felt by all classes. The remains were interred on the 7th instant, on which occasion, despite the cold and prevailing storm, a large congregation assembled to pay their respects to the memory of one they so highly esteemed. The funeral obsequies were performed by Rev. William R. Pepper. The Rev. Thos. Hartin and family were also present on the occasion. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire community.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY AT MILWAUKEE.

OVER SIXTY LIVES SUPPOSED TO BE LOST.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 10.—This morning at 3 47 o'clock an alarm of fire was turned in from box 439, corner of Vleit and Eighteenth streets. About half an hour later the two ominous strokes of a telephone alarm called the rest of the department not engaged at the Vleit street fire up again, and, three minutes later, an alarm from box 15, corner of Michigan street and Broadway, rang out. Chief Lippert hurried from Eighteenth street to the scene and sent out a second alarm. Four minutes later the whole department was called to the scene, leaving the chemical engine to battle with the blaze in the remote part of the city. The operators in the train-despatcher's office of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, in the Mitchell building, had seen from their quarters a light smoke emerging from the attics of the Newhall House. It was scarcely noticed until the general alarm was turned in, when they saw to their horror, that almost the entire south front of the Newhall House was one sea of flames. There were then but few people on the scene. In a moment every window of the large six-story hotel structure was filled with struggling guests, frantically and piteously beseeching the few below for aid, which it was impossible to render. But few of the unfortunate inmates gained the front entrance on Michigan street, although many might have been saved if some immediate attempt at systematic rescue had been made. The halls of the hotel were the scene of the wildest confusion. Men, women and children rushed up and down the halls in the dense, suffocating smoke, avoiding the blinding flames and roaring blaze, and, in their frantic efforts, rushing by the stairways and windows leading to the fire escapes, stumbling over bodies lying unconscious on carpeted walks, only to join soon the many prostrated forms whom a kind fate had touched with unconsciousness. The fire started, apparently, on the third floor of the doomed building, over the side entrance, on Michigan street, and, before the department got the steamers fairly into position, flames enveloped the whole southeast corner of the building, the fiery element licking its way greedily and with lightning rapidity toward the northern wing. Every window in the huge building was now lined with shrieking humanity. The multitude, which by this time had swelled to thousands, stood in perfect awe, but few having self possession and resolution enough to lend a helping hand on the canvas stretched out to receive those of the despairing inmates of the burning pyre who risked a leap down to the stone sidewalk 100 feet below. At first there were only a half-dozen men stretching the heavy canvas, which required fully 30 strong men to handle successfully. A poor fellow stood on the cornice of the fifth story corner window for 20 long minutes, not daring to attempt the fearful leap. Finally he became bewildered or dumfounded by smoke, and slid off his perch to the canvas below. The few who held it could not give it the necessary resistance, and he fell unhindered by the canvas, with a crash which sent a shudder through every witness. Hundreds of people were aimlessly looking on while his body was allowed to be thus mutilated, for lack of sufficient assistance. Nobody responded to the demands of the officers for aid. Everybody seemed to be spell-bound.

A man and a woman appeared at a window of the third story. They were recognized as Allen Johnson and his wife. A canvas was stretched below the windows of their apartment, and a thousand voices called, beseeching them to jump. Mr. Johnson kissed his wife, leaped into the air and shot downward into the canvas, but his weight pulled the canvas out of the hands of the few who held it, and he alighted on the ground with deathly force. His wife followed. Her body struck the veranda, and fell to the ground lifeless. Mr. Allen died shortly after in the express office, and his dead body was laid beside that of his wife until they were borne away. About a dozen jumped from the Michigan street front. Each leap meant death or shattered limbs, and not less than four unfortunates at one time lay upon the sidewalk in front of the chamber of commerce, clad only in night shirts, and blood oozing from wounds through which the bones protruded. Some were carried to the express office, others to the Mitchell building, where cots had been hastily arranged, and from there they were carried off to private houses of kind-hearted people. The scene in the alley west of the burning building was sickening. As early as 6 o'clock the bodies of seven unfortunate waiter girls were stretched upon the snow and ice, with broken limbs, writhing in agong until death ended their sufferings. After almost superhuman efforts, ladders were stretched from the roof of the bank building across the alley to the sixth story of the hotel, and the brave firemen carried 10 girls across the frail bridge, four of them dead. The maze of telegraph wire encircling the building played sad havoc with the unfortunates who made the frightful leap for life. Several of the bodies were cut deeply by the wires, and when the torn and bleeding forms dropped to the ground. Others hit the wires crosswise, rebounded and were hurled to the ground with a dreadful crash. To the poor unfortunate waiter girls, all lodged in the sixth story and attic, the saddest fate had fallen. Of the 60 young girls, only 11 were heard from alive this evening. It is feared that the estimate of 60 lives lost, formed this morning, is far too low, and that fully double that number were burned or smothered to death in the blazing pyre. The police patrol soon commenced their work of gathering the dead and wounded. The former were taken to the morgue, which was soon filled, and the latter to the central police station, where they were cared for by physicians. From 5 o'clock the interior of the building was one mass of flames, the upper floor soon giving away and carrying the lower floors with them. A thundering crash was heard for blocks, and then the fire shot up fully 50 feet, sending a shower of sparks and cinders over the whole northern portion of the city, carried ahead by a brisk wind. In three quarters of an hour after the discovery of the fire the building was a total loss.

The police think that the fire was of incendiary origin, but, so far, nothing has been discovered to substantiate this theory. It is reported that there were 350 guests in the house last night. If this be true, the horrors that will be revealed by the removal of the debris are too dreadful to contemplate. The Newhall was known to every traveller in the Northwest and to people in Milwaukee as a fire trap of the worst description, and, while horror and sympathy are expressed on all sides at the dreadful catastrophe, wonder also prevails, to a great extent, that any traveller or resident could be found to take up abode within its walls. It should have been condemned long ago.

Edward Pollobk, of Lancaster, Wis, was a guest at the house. He occupied a room on the fourth floor of the Broadway front, nearly over the balcony. At about 3 30 he was awakened by the breaking of glass in the transom over the door and the fierce flames through the opening. He immediately gathered up his clothes as far as possible and stepped out on the balcony. He put on his clothes and swung to the balcony beneath, where half a dozen others were gathered. Here sheets and bedclothes were tied together and the ground was reached by this rope. Mr. Pollock was at one time a representative of the Sentinel at Lancaster, and came to Milwaukee to buy an outfit for a newspaper at his place. He said to a reporter of the Sentinel that the fire seemed all above him when he first awakened, and in an instant after the flames had engulfed everything. He left his vest behind him, in which was a gold watch and $50 in money.

I CERTIFY that I obtained immediate relief during a severe case of bronchitis, when in Camp Sussex this year, by the application of Minard's Liniment.

A very strongly worded remonstrance has been presented to the United States Congress against the passage of any bankrupt act. It is signed by some twelve hundred firms and individuals doing business in New York, many of whom are among the largest and most respected mercantile houses. It alleges that no bankrupt act is necessary to secure the discharge of an honest but unfortunate debtor, while those which have been passed have been a temptation to fraud.
