Poetry. Dear Mother's Growing Old.

Her voice has less of cheer, While in her hair, once dark as night, The threads of gray appear, And ah! I am reminded. When I her face behold, That though she still is beautiful, Dear mother's growing old. Her cheeks have lost their glory, So like the blush of morn, Her smiles are flown that used to bless The heart when sorrow worn. And when I mark her step that Was buoyant once and bold.

That mother's growing old. Turn back the years, O Father! And make her young once more, Just as my soul remembers her, In happy days of yore; When at her side my life in Full gladness did unfold, And I, a little child, dreamed not Dear mother would grow old.

cannot help the thought-so sad,

Her eye is not so lustrous,

Beyond these hours of fleeting, Beyond earth's toils and tears, In that sweet land I hope to gain, Beyond these mortal years. Nothing shall waste her pure life, But beauty manifold, With bappioese, shall crown her lot, And mother'll ne'er grow old - George Newell Lovejoy.

BAD NEWS FROM THE FOREST.—We take the extract given below from the Bengor Commercial. The facts stated therein are of very considerable importance. We have no reason to think that such widespread destruction is going on in this province, but the subject is well worthy of attention.

"Reports from the lumber regions of Aroostook show that the spruce trees are dying at a fearful rate. Last winter operations were begun on a part of a township where it were begun on a part of a township where it was expected that 700,000 ft. would be cut, but only 75,000 ft. of sound spruce could be found. A close examination showed that the spruce on the rest of the township was in the same condition. There is a township on the Fish River waters that is well timber-ed and a fine chance for lumber operations. On this tract it is estimated that 5,000,000 feet of sound spruce is standing to-day, but at the rate trees are dying in five years there will not be a million feet. So far as can be ascertained there are no worms at work on the Spruce and the cause of its decay is a mystery. The tops of the dead spruce bave a reddish color and look as though they had
