DR. B. J. KENDALL & Co., GENTS:—Having used a good deal of your Kendall's Spavin Cure with great success, I thought I would let you know what it has done for me. Two years ago I had as speedy a colt as was raised in Jefferson County. When I was breaking him, he kicked over the cross bar and got fast and tore one of his hind legs all to pieces. I employed the best farriers, but they all said he was spoiled. He had a very large thorough pin, and I used two bottles of Kendall's Spavin Cure, and it took the bunch entirely off, and he sold afterwards for $1800. I have used it for bone spavins and wind galls, and it has always cured completely and left the leg smooth.
It is splendid medicine for rheumatism I have recommended it to a good many, and they all say it does the work. I was in Witherington & Kneeland's drug store, in Adams, the other day and saw a very fine picture you sent them. I tried to buy it but could not; they said if I would write to you that you would send me one. I wish you would and I will do you all the good I can. Very respectfully,
E. S. LYMAN.

Select Tale.

GLEN ALLEN.

A heavy mist hung gloomily above the peaks of the Wicklow mountains; a damp chilliness prevaded the atmosphere; piles of sullen clouds lowered from the frowning skies and narrowed the already narrow horizon; a veil of moisture robed the meadows and dulled the clatter, up the uneven country road, of the approach of a small band of mounted dragoons.

'Halt!'

'Twas a stern, sonorous voice—a voice that would make you lift your eyes quickly and instinctively to scan the owner. It proceeded from stern, firm but handsome lips. It was enforced by the keen glitter of a pair of dark gray piercing eyes; by the majesty of a free commanding form and by an air of native power entirely unassumed.

The party drew up before one of those pretty cottages that have so naturally sprung up in the beautiful wilds of Wicklow. A rustic gate stood half-open and revealed a small and tastefully laid out garden with neatly kept walks, inviting the pressure of the intruder's foot. A porch, half-buried in woodbine, low windows draped in soft folds of white lace, through which the eye might trace a faint impression of a pleasant interior—these met the gaze of Captain Howard as he pushed wide the garden gate and strode within. The slow, irregular notes of a harp, as though the player, following a vague fancy, wandered aimlessly over the chords arrested for a moment the advance of the dragoon. With a sudden impulse he turned backward to his men, and merely saying, 'Wait till my return,' he moved with measured steps to the porch and knocked.

'Twas strange that in the few moments between his summons and the apperance of a white headed domestic the image of a sweet face he had seen and loved in another land should present itself so forcibly to his imagination and stranger still that, as he lifted his eyes from that glance into his own hidden heart, he could almost swear the face looked at him for an instant from the diamond window near. Slightly moved, he saluted the porter by requesting to speak with the master of the house, at the same time gently insinuating he would bear him company, as his business was too urgent to admit of even the delay of waiting the gentleman's permission.

'Deed, then, I'm afeard he'll be mad enough with me for letting you come in uninvited, I may say,' said the old man; 'but come along—and niver welcome you,' he continued under his teeth, 'you Saxon hound. See, sir, here's a gentleman soldier was in such a hurry to see you he wouldn't wait for me to bring his name.'

Seated in an arm-chair, reading or pretending to read, by a cheerful fire, the person addressed looked up, laid down his book, deliberately wiped his spectacles and resuming them, surveyed the visitor.

Mine is an errand much to my distaste, sir,' the dragoon began. 'My intrusion would be unpardonable, but that a stern duty brings me here, and I have no choice but to obey.'

The occupant of the arm-chair made an effort to speak, but, though his lips moved, no sound escaped them. He was a very elderly man, and very delicate looking, with a nervous twitching, closing and unclosing of the hand holding the spectacles. He motioned the dragoon to a seat, and again looked in his face interrogatively.

Captain Howard was less and less pleased with his mission. He was a haughty man, but with a good and noble heart, straight-faced in outward coldness and formality. He was an Englishman by birth, and did not consider himself bound in any ungenerous crusade when he offered his services to the Government for the purpose of quelling the Irish insurrection.

But taking the field and playing policeman are two different things. At least, so Captain Howard thought, and it was with mortification he found that the role of dragoon captain in Ireland was at the time more than half police exercise. Registering an inward vow to resign his commission at the first opportunity, the captain returned to the object of his mission.

'This place, is it not called Glen Allen?'

The old gentleman motioned assent. Unfolding a document, the Captain continued: 'The Government having had information that in this house is concealed a notorious rebel, for whose capture a large reward is offered, I am deputed to search the premises and ascertain the correctness of the information. As a loyal man you are required to render all due assistance in the investigation.'

The old gentleman, rising in a stately manner, signified his willingness, and with a strange repugnance to the performance of the duty, Captain Howard ordered from the doorway half his men to surround the house and arrest any one attempting to escape, the remainder to enter the house and await his orders.

While the search progressed he stood with arms folded and gloomy brows, following mechanically from room to room. Suddenly his gaze fastened on a picture—an oil painting—of a brown-ringleted girl, with soft, hazel eyes, childlike in their candor and innocence, and sweet red lips, occupying the place of honor over the mantle shelf. It was the face that had haunted him for a twelve month, the face of a girl that he had met in London society, had followed ineffectually, and had loved unreasonably. It was a face he had suddenly lost sight of, and sought in vain until now. He learned from the old man that it was the picture of 'a relative' at present staying with him. With unconcealed anxiety the captain requested to be allowed to see the original of the picture, and the old gentleman, humoring his visitor's strange fancy, left the room and returned presently with a young lady whose extreme pallor was heightened by her dress of deep mourning and the melancholy of her soft hazel eyes. At sight of the stranger a faint blush dyed her cheeks, —Captain Howard, much agitated, advanced, and, taking her hand eagerly, convinced himself by her recognition that his fair London acquaintance stood before him.

'How came it I lost sight of you so entirely after that brief London carnival,' he said, 'and how is it I find you here in this convulsed country—in this solitude?'

"For the first question I can answer, there is nothing more common than for casual acquaintances, in a strange country, to meet, part, lose sight of each other, unless some powerful incentive remains urging a pursuance of the acquaintance. To the second I would answer, this is my native land—these are my native hills; what place more meet for my residence? she spoke half contemptuously, half defiantly.

"And your brother, the dark-eyed, Quixotic boy. Great God!" he muttered, 'it cannot be.'

A deadly pallor spread over the girl's face; she raised herself proudly to her full height and demanded, 'Well, sir, what cannot be?'

He silently handed her the warrant for the arrest of a dark slender youth, name assumed, whose capture was important to the government, and against whom there was strong information. The paper went on to state he had been known to be connected, on important occasions, with some of the most prominent rebel leaders, and a large reward was offered for his arrest, alive or dead.

The lady flushed and paled as her eye ran over the document, and her agitation was not lost on the dragoon. With sudden resolve he said, turning to his men:

'There is no necessity to search further, I believe.'

And despite of the evident sulkiness and disaffection of the disappointed dragoons, he gave the order to remount and return to Wicklow. Nor could he fail to mark the sigh of relief that escaped the lips of the fair girl he had sought unavowedly to serve. He, in courtly manner, renewed his apologies to the host; trusted for the happiness of meeting the lady, and, if possible, serving her; and with a new lightness in his step and the cloud of his brow sprang into the saddle. As he did so a loud shout broke from the watch set at the rear of the house, and the dragoons quickly appeared, dragging with them a slight, dark-complexioned youth, whose appearance indicated the sharpness of the struggle he had made to escape.

A week afterward the police annals were full of the escape of the rebel captured at Glen Allen, and the suspicion attached to Howard, the dragoon captain, who was supposed to have given him facilities to elude his captors. Though that could not be proved. Howard was officially reprimanded for his want of diligence, and taking the hint, he retired at once from his position in the army. The day Captain Howard's resignation was accepted, the master of Glen Allen cottage and his fair relative prepared to join the young outlaw of the family in his refuge at Havre. The cottage bore a dreary aspect, all except the garden, in which stood the fair lady to whose influence the exile owed his safety, and by her side stood Captain Howard.

'You will forget that you have ever seen me. You will forget you should reward me,' he was saying earnestly and yet smilingly.

'I,' she murmured brokenly, 'shall never, while life lasts, forget or cease to be grateful for your generosity; but I am poor and obscure, who have been wealthy and influential. What could I do to compensate your generous act—your loss?'

'Much, lady,' he said gently, 'This little hand, nay, do not remove it—is worth a thousand such acts, a thousand such losses. Let it repay me.'

A DRAPED LOCOMOTIVE.—"To me," the sad passenger said, "there is something inexpressibly mournful in a draped locomotive; and especially so when it is draped in mourning for a dead engineer. The president of a railway company stands a long way from the engine, and when he dies the engine mourns as we sorrow for a rich uncle whom we never saw and who left us nothing. But the man who was a part of the engine's life, who spurred her up the long, steep, climbing mountain grades, and coaxed her around dizzy curves, and sent her down the long level stretches with the flight of an arrow; who knew how to humor all her caprices, and coaxed and petted and urged her through blinding storms and rayless nights, and blistering heat and stinging cold, until engine and engineer seemed to be body and soul of one existence—then, when this man at last gets his final orders, and crosses the dark river alone, with only the fadeless target lights of sure and eternal promise gleaming brightly on the other side; and when there is a new man on the right-hand side, and a new face looks out of the engineer's window, then I think I can see profound and sincere sorrow in the panting spirit of power, standing in the station, draped with fluttering emblems of woe, waiting for the caressing touches of the dead hands that it will never feel again. And engineers tell me that for days and days the engine is fretful under the new hands; it is restless and moody, starts off nervously and impatiently sometimes, then drops into a sullen gait and loses time; that no man gets so much out of an engine as its own engineer."

"Do you remember only a year or two ago," the jester said, "only last summer, I believe it was, an engineer on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, running west from Chicago, died on his engine? Died right in his place, running between Galesburg and Monmouth, and sat there with his hand on the lever, and his sightless eyes staring glassily down the track, unnoticed, until the fireman looked up to see why he did not whistle for Monmouth station. And how many miles that train had thundered along with the dead engineer looking out of the cab window into eternity, no one knew and no one knows."—Burlington Hawkeye.

HOW CANADA OBTAINED ITS NAME.—The origin of the word Canada is curious enough. The Spaniards visited that country previous to the French, and made partial searches for gold and silver, and finding none, they often said among themselves "A can nada" (there is nothing here). The Indians, who watched closely, learned the sentence and its meaning. After the departure of the Spaniards the French arrived, and the Indians, who wanted none of their company, and supposed they also were Spaniards come on the same errand, were anxious to inform them that their labour was lost by tarrying in that country, and frequently repeated to them the Spanish sentence "A can nada." The French, who knew as little of Spanish as the Indians, supposed this incessantly-recurring sound was the name of the country, and gave it the name of Canada, which it has borne ever since.

Scrofula is a depraved condition of the system often hereditary, and characterized by indolent tumors, glandular affections, bad blood and a low condition of vitality that tends towards consumption, which is really Scrofula of the Lungs. They say now that if you tamp some salt into your pipe the tobacco smoke will not injure your nerves. We follow this plan ourselves—and also leave out the tobacco, which is a still greater improvement.

ERUPTIVE DISEASES, such as Pimples, Boils, Blotches, Ringworm, Salt Rheum, Tetter, &c., yield readily to a persistent use of Hanington's Quinine Wine and Iron, and Toxic Dinner Pills, which by purifying the blood removes these unsightly evidences of inward disorder. If the blood is pure, the skin is exempt from these blemishes, and the value of these medicines as a blood purifier cannot be over-estimated. EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER FROM C. H. S. CRONKHITE, ESQ.
Canterbury Station, York Co., N. B., October 10th, 1876.
Mr. J. H. Robinson,
Dear Sir—In reply to your letter of enquiry, I would say that your Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Lacto-Phosphate of Lime is the best preparation of the kind I have ever seen or taken.
I was ordered by my physician to take it, and commenced about the last of August, and since that time I have felt like a different man, and also look differently, and all for the better as the doctor can testify.
I was unable, in the summer to walk any distance without much fatigue. I can now take my gun and travel all day and feel first-rate at night and eat as much as any lumber man. Have not bled any since I took your preparation and can now inflate my lungs without feeling any soreness, and I think I can inflate them up to full measurement, same as before I was sick; have also gained in flesh, my weight in the summer was 173 lbs., and now it is nearly 190 lbs., which is pretty well up to my former weight.
The above is a correct statement which I am prepared to swear to, and I hereby authorize you to give it publicity in my name.
I am, dear sir, yours truly,
(Signed) C. H. S. CRONKHITE.
We the undersigned, hereby consent to have our names published as witnesses to the effects of Robinson's Phosphorized Emulsion on the person of Mr. Cronkhite, and do assert that the foregoing statement is correct in every particular.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—Since Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has become celebrated, a number of unprincipled persons have been endeavoring to palm off Electron and Electric Oil for the genuine DR. THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL. Beware of these similar named articles. If their originators had any faith in the healing properties of their own medicines, they would, like honest men, give them a name of their own, and not try to sell them on the reputation of another; but as they know their preparations have no merit, they resort to the most unprincipled means of selling them by getting a name as near as possible to Eclectric. We therefore ask the public when purchasing to see that the name Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is on the front of the wrapper, and the signature of NORTHROP & LYMAN, the proprietors for Canada on the back.

J. S. Wetherell, writing from Winnipeg, says: "I can say more about PHOSPHATINE now than when I saw you last in Toronto. My health is much improved, and I am free from headaches or any other aches, having only used two and a half bottles of your Phosphatine. For sale by all druggists.

Job went pretty heavily into the boil business, and the venture was a complete success. This reminds us that PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR is an another success, and that it gives more comfort to the world than Job's boils did.
