The Professor's Story. Taking tea the other evening with an old acquaintance, now professor in a New England college, the conversation recalled some of the friends of our younger days, and he surprised me with this remark: 'A woman's sympathies lie nearer her heart than her love, unless her love is born of them.' But he surprised me more by the story he told to prove it.

I guess it was seven years, he said. that our chair of astronomy remained vacant. You know of Dr. Merdon. It was justly that the world finally gave him fame. Well, after his death the trustees were at a loss to fill his place. A weak man would have been unsuffer-

General Hews. Bayfield, Westmoreland Co, Items. Our last batch of Items got as far as the post office subject, and there we stopped, and if you lived here, Mr. Editor, you would find that frequently to be the case, for our mail is due at 10 a. m., and we often have to wait until near noon. This is accounted for by the badness of the roads, and other causes "too numerous to mention." We are not altogether dependent upon our two mails a week for news from "the outside world," for we have a telegraph office almost at our door, where toils the genial J. Bedford Allen, one of our much respected young men. Of our business stands we have already spoken, but we have not told you of the great number of lobster factories which line our shores.

We have within a stretch of twenty miles some six factories, all doing quite an extensive ousiness. Of these the largest is the one at Bayfield, owned by Charles Prescott and J.
