A LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN
On the Loss of MANHOOD
We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.
☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.
The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

Poetry.

Is it Wrong to Kiss?

"Is it wrong to kiss?" asked a timid maid
Of the simmering sands that border the deep,
But no answer she got save the wavelets played
A roundelay gay as they kissed her feet.

She asked the sun, but he only turned
His saucy face from the eastern sky,
And kissed her cheeks till they fairly burned,
And a tear of vexation dimmed her eye.

She asked the wind as it came from the south
The self-same question. The answer came,
For a zephyr sprang up and kissed her mouth
And ruby red lips till they seemed aflame.

She asked a youth who had chanced along
And the moral question was solved in a trice;
For he answered: "O maiden, it may be wrong,
But"—here he proved it—"it's very nice!"

If the sea and sun and soft south wind
Kiss unmolested by bolt or ban,
Where the heart is eager, and lips and mind
Are not reluctant, why shouldn't man?

Select Tale.

Squire Danby's Money.

It was many long years ago—the low line of sunset was quivering like a crimson rivulet over the western woods—and the snowy gable end roofs of the obscure little village were just reddening with the momentary glow, as the lumbering stagecoach drove up to the inn door, with a rattle of wheels and discordant notes of an antique horn.

Only one passenger for Smith's Corner—a short, middle-aged gentleman, well wrapped up, and he at once entered the inn parlor.

'Can I have a conveyance to take me to Squire Danby's?' he asked, unrolling enough of his wrapper to display a ruddy face, keen black eyes, and a heavy black beard.

'Squire Danby's?' repeated the landlord, musingly. 'Why, you're some kin to the old gentleman, I suppose?'

'I am his nephew.'

'You are, eh? Then I suppose you know he's on his dying bed?'

'That is the very reason I am in a hurry to get to him,' said the stranger so sharply that the landlord hastened away to give the necessary directions before he again resumed the conversation.

'A queer sort of customer, old Squire Danby,' he said, rubbing his hands as if he would rub in the brightness of the huge fire before which he stood. 'Rich as Cœsus, and odd as—as I don't know what. Sent for you, I suppose?'

'No, I heard of his illness merely by accident.'

'Mrs. Warren is there — his cousin, you know—twice removed by the mother's side—the girl he brought up, and quarrelled with when she married Mr. Warren, and—'

'Jessie Warren there!'

The stranger stopped, and bit his lip abruptly.

'Yes,' assented the landlord; 'she and her little girls have been there these six months. Folks think it likely he'll leave her a good bit of the property, now the've made up. The fly's ready sir; but won't you have a bite and a sup before you start?'

But Jonas Cassedy was in too great haste to delay for any trifling considerations.

'Too late—I fear I am too late, if Jessie Warren is there—Jessie, who used to be so near to his heart! I thought the breach between them was irremediable; but who can calculate on the strange workings of an old dotard's mind? Have I waited and hoped all these years, and risked so much on the chance of inheriting Daniel Danby's money, to be disappointed at last?"

* * * * * * *

'How are you feeling to-night, uncle?' Squire Danby, with his ghastly face rendered ghastlier still by the contrast of snowy, piled-up pillows, gave a nervous start, as Jonas Cassedy's soft modulated voice fell on his ears.

'Go away,' he snarled, impatiently, pushing away his nephew's white, plump hand. "Go away! Can't you even leave me to die in peace?'

'I have come to take care of you, uncle!

'I don't want your care; Jessie takes care of me; Jessie is always good to the old man.'

There was a malevolent glare in the look that Cassedy cast at the pale, wan woman who sat by Uncle Daniel Danby's dying couch; but he spoke softly when he said, 'Cousin Jessie, you are tired. Let me watch by him to-night; he will never know the difference when he is once asleep.'

Mrs. Warren hesitated. She felt that some concession was due to the man who had travelled so far to look once more upon the Squire's face.

'He must be very fond of his uncle,' thought simple Jessie.

And she arranged the medicines, and whispered the necessary directions; and stooping to press her lips to the pinched sunken temples of the man who lay there, half unconscious, she left the room.

Jonas Cassedy had travelled all that day, and slumber drifted down upon him ere he was aware of it.

Suddenly he woke up. The fire had burned down low, but it was clear: and, like a white-robed ghost, Daniel Danby stood in the centre of the room, with Death written on his face!

'Uncle, what is the matter? What can I do for you?'

Daniel Danby's glazing eyes stared vacantly at his nephew.

'I—I don't remember where I put it!' he muttered. 'I thought—I thought—and now Jonas Cassedy is here, and I cannot find it!' Jessie — tell Jessie to come!'

And with those words on his lips, the old miser fell dead on his own hearthstone.

* * * * * * *

'I'm very sorry—verry sorry, indeed Cousin Jessie; but you see it's quite natural that my uncle should leave his property to his nephew instead of far-away cousins. I can't do anything for you myself; I've a large and expensive family dependent on me, and I'm sure it's very generous of Uncle Daniel to leave you the furniture—quite substanial some of it, I observe. Of course, you'll get it out of the house as soon as possible, as I want to dispose of the property. What's that you were remarking, Cousin Jessie? A widow? Oh, well that's a dispensation of Providence; We must all bow to the decree of Providence; and I dare say you can get your girls out as governesses, or something of that sort.'

'But, Jonas—.'

'I must repeat more decidedly than before, Cousin Jessie, that I can't possibly help you. My expenses are tremendous, and it's my opinion that people should take care of themselves. After all, Uncle Daniel wasn't as rich as I supposed. Fifty thousand pounds—that isn't such a mint of money.'

Poor Mrs. Warren thought it a great deal.

Mr. Jonas Cassedy went through the orthodox amount of tears and groans at his uncle's funeral, put everything in nice legal trim, and went merrily home to his house in London, while Jessie Warren meekly prepared for her life of penury and trial.

'It is my uncle's furniture, and some of it very old and curious,' she said to the second-hand dealer from the neighboring town. 'I should like to keep it, but it is quite out of the question.'

'I can't offer you a great deal, ma'am,' said the man. 'How much do you ask?

'I have no idea of what they are worth,' said Jessie, wistfully.

'Say seventy-five pounds for the lot?'

'Cannot you afford to give any more?'

'Couldn't ma'm, possibly.'

And Uncle Daniel Danby's century-old chairs and tables were at once sold.

But as the purchaser was trying to get an ancient walnut press down the steep stairs, it fell and split and disclosed a secret drawer. This, on being opened, was found to contain a dusty parchment, that turned out to be a will executed subsequently to the one under which Jonas Cassedy claimed the estate. This newly found will bequeathed and devised all the Danby property to Jessie Warren and her heirs forever.

Jonas, on hearing of this discovery, attempted to overthrow it; but the will was attested in due form; and Jessie got the property, while Mr. Cassedy was left to the bankruptcy which had long been impending over him.

OSSIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE SUN.—O, thou that rollest about, round as the shield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O sun! thy everlasting light? Thou comest forth in thy awful beauty—the stars hide themselves in the sky. the moon, cold and pale, sinks in the western wave. But thou thyself movest alone; who can be a companion of thy course? The oaks of the mountain fall; the mountains themselves decay with years; the ocean shrinks and grows again; the moon herself is lost in heaven; but thou art forever the same, rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests, when thunder rolls, and lightning flies, thou lookest in thy beauty from the clouds, and laughest at the storm. But to Ossian thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more, whether thy yellow hairs flow on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art perhaps like me—for a season; thy years will have an end; thou shalt sleep in the clouds, careless of the voice in the morning. Exult then, O sun, in the strength of thy youth! Age is dark and unlovely: it is like the glimmering light of the moon when it shines through broken clouds; the mist is on the hills; the blast of the north is on the plain; the traveller shirks in the midst of his journey.

TEACHERS OF GRAMMAR.—A scholarly knowledge of the science of grammar, for instance, is not specically advantageous to the teacher whose sole business, as an instructor in grammer, is to impart to the young an understanding knowledge of first principles. What is the object of grammatical instruction in a common school? Certainly to inform the young that language has certain laws of construction; to teach the correct use of words and proper disposition of sentences; to prepare the pupil for the higher departments of training, whose province it is to teach the forms of correctly worded and composed writing. The object of grammatical instruction is certainly not to inform the pupil that there is a science of grammar; in a word, it is not to teach him grammar, but to teach him English—to make him intelligent as far as elementrry grammar can do so.

Who is the best teacher in any given branch—for example, grammar? It is not necessarily he who has every grammactical rule stored in his memory. A teacher may be thoroughly skilled in the science of grammar, but lack every pedagogic ability to impart his information. In this case he will be a good grammarian but a very poor grammatical instructor.

The best teacher of grammar must, in the first place, know what he is to teach, why he teaches it, and what is the object of teaching it. In the second place, he must have a good plan of teaching grammar; he must know how to teach it in order that his pupils may learn and profit by what he knows. In the third place, he must be able to teach it; he must have the pedagogic ability to instruct his pupils in grammar so that a knowledge of grammar will be useful to them.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

LEAF FROM THE CZAR'S DIARY.—Got up at 7 a. m. and ordered my bath. Found four gallons of vitriol in it and did not take it. Went to breakfast. The Nihilists had placed two torpedoes on the stairs, but I did not step on them. The coffee smelled so strongly of prussic acid that I was afraid to drink it. Found a scorpion in my left slipper, but luckily shook it out before putting it on. Just before stepping into the carriage to go for my morning drive, it was blown into the air, killing the coachman and the horses instantly, I did not drive. Took a light lunch off hermetically sealed American canned goods. They can't fool me there. Found a poisoned dagger in my favorite chair, with the point sticking out. Did not sit down on it. Had dinner at 6 p. m. and made Baron Laischounowoonski taste every dish. He died before the soup was cleared away. Consumed some Baltimore oysters and some London stout that I have had locked up five years. Went to the theatre and was shot at three times in the first act. Had the entire audience hanged. Went home to bed and slept all night on the roof of the palace.

To listen kindly is often an act of the most delicate interior mortification, and helps us very much to speak kindly ourselves.

Local & Foreign Items.

It has been sensibly suggested that in teaching geography in schools, the maps should have all the railroads as well as rivers laid out, and that the sources of such railways and the towns upon them, should quite as much be made matters of education as the rivers or the mountains. By all means, why not?

Woman and Her Diseases
is the title of a large illustrated treatise, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., sent to any address for three stamps. It teaches successful self-treatment.

An effort is being made in the South Carolina Methodist Conference to raise their missionary collections by contributions of one cent from each member per week. When this is impossible, eggs are received in lieu of the coin, and it is not unusual to collect a hat full of eggs at a service.

CAUTION.
We advise all who are afflicted with a cough or cold to beware of opiates and all medicines that smother and check a cough suddenly, as serious results surely follow. Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam loosens and breaks up coughs and colds in a safe and effectual manner.

In an Egyptian tomb has been found a pair of socks knitted 2,000 years ago. They are loosely knit of fine sheep's wool, and the foot is finished in two parts to allow the sandal strap to pass between them.

A Common Annoyance.
Many people suffer from distressing attacks of sick headache, nausea and other bilious troubles, who might easily be cured by Burdock Blood Bitters. It cured Lottie Howard, of Buffalo, N. Y., of this complaint and she praises it highly.

What's in a name? Mary Young died at Bangor last week, aged one hundred years, three months and two days. She was an estimable woman. The good died Young.

A Remarkable Result.
W. A. Edgar, of Frankville, was a terrible sufferer from Chronic Kidney and Liver Complaint, and at one time was so bad that his life was despaired of. He was cured by four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Of the 21 cotton mills in Canada, nine are in the province of Ontario, running 8,700 looms and 171,000 spindles: six are in Quebec with 4,030 looms and 188,100 spindles; four in New Brunswick, with 1,500 looms and 68 700 spindles, and two are in Nova Scotia with 7,500 looms and 34,000 spindles.

Backache is almost immediately relieved by wearing one of Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

From returns prepared by the Department of Agriculture, it is shown that during the present year 55,674 cattle have been exported from Canada to European and American ports. Last year the export trade totalled 38,738. The sheep trade has increased from 75 905 to 173,735 in 1882.

Why don't you try Carter's Little Liver Pills? They are a positive cure for sick headache and all the ills produced by disordered liver. Only one pill a dose.

A Biddeford gentleman found in his woodshed recently a dead weasel with his tongue frozen to an axe blade. The axe had been used in cutting beef in the morning, and the animal, in attempting to secure a piece of meat which adhered to the blade, had singularly met his death.

Do Not be Duped.
A recently advertised and highly puffed remedy for deafness has lately been exposed as an unmitigated fraud. Not so with Hagyard's Yellow Oil; none name it but to praise. John Clark, of Millbridge, testifies that it cured him of deafness.

It isn't such a bad thing to be a crack oarsman. During the last five years Hanlan has managed to win $70,000, that is, an average of $14,000 per annum, or twice the salary of the Premier of the Dominion.

An Enthusiastic Endorsement.
GORHAM, N. H., July 14th, 1879.
GENTS—Whoever you are I don't know; but I thank the Lord and feel grateful to you to know that in this world of adulterated medicines there is one compound that proves and does all that it advertises to do and more. Four years ago I had a slight shock of palsy, which unnerved me to such an extent that the least excitement would make me shake like the ague. Last May I was induced to try Hop Bitters. I used one bottle, but did not see any change; another did so change my nerves that they are now as steady as they ever were. It used to take both hands to write, but now my good right hand writes this. Now, if you continue to manufacture as honest and good an article as you do, you will accumulate an honest fortune, and confer the greatest blessing on your fellowmen that was ever conferred on mankind.
TIM BURCH.

Experts in chemistry have estimated that the cost of London's winter smoke and fog is $25,000,000 annually; that is to say, constituents of coal to this value escape unconsumed, and assist in forming the sooty vapor.

If we could speak in tones of thunder we would use our voice to advise all people everywhere to get at once a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. As a preventive of diphtheria, pneumonia, congestion and all dangerous throat and lung diseases its value is priceless.

A caterer in Buffalo, N. Y., cooks angle worms. He feeds them on milk for a few days, dusts them with flour, and drops them into a pan of burning oil or fat. They are served in drawn butter with a little lemon juice and Worcestershire sauce.

Certain parties have been for years flooding the country with immense packs of horse and cattle powders which are utterly worthless. Don't be deceived by them. Sheridan's powders are the only kind now known in this country which are strictly pure. They are very powerful.

Peter Shinkle, of Cincinnati, aged 93, has just married a lady of 50. These giddy things will be sorry for this when they grow old.

No sufferer from any scrofulous disease, who will fairly try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, need despair of a cure. It will purge the blood of all impurities, thereby destroying the germs from which scrofula is developed, and will infuse new life and vigor throughout the whole physical organization.

A Methodist choir in Manchester, England, has 1.140 singers.

Some say "Consumption can't be cured." Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, as proved by forty years experience, will cure this disease when not already advanced beyond the reach of medical aid. Even then its use affords very great relief, and ensures refreshing sleep.

The total number of deaths in New York City in 1883 was 33,982.

For all troubles of the Throat, use Allen's Lung Balsam. See advt. in another column.

Seventy six persons have been baptized in connection with the Baptist revival at Mackinaquack, York Co.

General News.

THE CRASH OF WORLDS.—If ever two great worlds do meet in this way it is possible to predict some of the consequences. To use the technical language of science, "their energy of molar motion will be converted into various forms of molecular and potential energy;" which, translated into the vernacular, means that there will be evolution of heat and light, at the same time the solids present will be wholly or in part liquified, the
