Only Going to the Gato.
Like a bell of blossom ringing, Clear and childish, shrill and sweet,
With the fainter fall of feet,
Comes the answer soft backward, Bidding tender watcher wait, While the baby-queen outruns her,
"Only going to the gato."

LETTER FROM LIVERPOOL.
DEAR SIRS.—I am back again in Liverpool, and now write you from this the second largest city in the United Kingdom, numbering as it does something over 500,000 inhabitants, and rapidly increasing. I have visitors to this country from Canada and the United States here, but as they generally merely pass through on their way to other places, but little is known to them of the city, reaching along its river front for upwards of eight miles and back into the country from two to four miles. I know whereof I speak, as I had the experience myself of crossing night and morning for nearly three years before I left those parts to make my home "in that new world which is the old."

The distance across is about a mile.
We have had an exceptionally mild winter on the whole so far. I have seen snow-drifts, daisies, &c., in bloom in the open air and we have not had an inch of snow altogether. The weather of late, however, has been very wild and fearful gales have visited all parts of the British Isles. Reports are coming in daily from all parts, of disasters on both land and sea. Among the most recently reported is one very sad one just received. A fine iron sailing vessel of 1400 tons, named the "Juno," left Liverpool a week ago Saturday four o'clock P.M. Proceeding down the Channel the result of a succession of gales broke upon her with such violence and so suddenly as to carry away most of her sails and the captain determined to put her underway. Arriving at the mouth of the river last Sunday night, the wind then blowing "veer" gale, "as the sailors say," she was driven ashore, the sea sweeping over her.
Early on Monday morning reports were sent up and the life boats from this station and New Brighton were sent out to rescue her. After being out for one ten hours and the other seven, the weather being bitterly cold, they had reluctantly to return, leaving the sailors who had now been out rigging, to their fate. As the boats came away the poor fellows ran up higher on the beach, making every effort to save the crew to stand by them longer. It was impossible, however, to cross the bar, owing to the fearful sea running, and in a short time every man was lost. The "Juno" was a new vessel, and the crew were all young men. The writer was at the scene of the disaster next day, and found the shore for miles strewn with wreckage, and the bodies of the crew lying about. There were thirty-one lives lost in this wreck, including the pilot, who had left the ship, and four others who only one body up to the time of my leaving had been washed up—that of the captain's wife who was firmly fastened with her in two life preservers—one of rubber the other of cork. The body presented the appearance of one who had died from exhaustion rather than drowning. Among the wreckage cast up I noticed a small round marked "Mrs. E. C." and beside it some New York cards, which had evidently washed out. One of the crew, a young man named "John," was found floating in the water. A horrible case of wholesale poisoning has been brought to light here, and has resulted in the death of a young man named Flanagan and Higgins are shortly to be tried for the murder of four persons, including a son of the first named. The case is a very curious one, and a young woman who lived in the house of Mrs. Flanagan. The mode of poisoning was very singular. A proceedure is now being taken to get the parties involved in various cases of poisoning as many as five or six parties to the same party and then helping them to "shuttle off their mortal coil" with the aid of poison. One of the murders was committed as long as three years ago, and in each case the bodies have been exhumed for medical examination, being in a very excellent state of preservation, owing, no doubt, to the presence of poison in the system. I was present at the Police Court during one of the investigations, and two hard looking characters I would not want to meet. I should not choose either of them for a nurse if I were sick!

Local & Foreign Items.
Through the instrumentality of a Boston lady a fraudulent divorce bureau in New York was detected, which, it seems, has advertised extensively facilities for procuring divorces quickly, quietly and cheaply. The lady adopted was to forge the signatures of the proper officers to decrees of divorce and use a bogus seal. The firm had done quite an extensive business, and a large number of parties now find to their sorrow that they are not, as they supposed, their wives, legally divorced.

But I did not stop to think why this was so. I created a rush in, and as breathlessly fled into the parlor, where the first thing I saw was Flora, talking and gesticulating violently to some gentleman, who, facing around at the noise of my entrance, revealed the form and face of Cousin Sam.
