SEEING A TORNADO. -Mr. Frank Haralson, State Librarian, who has just returned from a trip to the mountains, tells an interesting story of how a big tornado afforded a grand entertainment for the people living in por-tions of Fannin, Union and other mountain counties. The tornado, which did such fearful damage on the side of the mountain sremed to bound over the Blue Ridge and, getting at an elevation of what appeared to be half a mile, swept across the heavens in all the fury of its accustomed convulsions, while all below was quiet and peaceful. The inhabitants were permitted the rare privilege of seeing the storm without feeling any of its dangerous embraces. They describe it as being a terrific battle of the most awful looking clouds they ever saw, overspreading nearly the entire heavens.
