A REMARKABLE CASE. - There lived in

Paris, more than a century ago, an old dame who kept a shop in a house not far distant from the Place St. Michel. She was reported rich, and was supposed to keep her money in the house. Her only servant was a boy, who had lived with her for several years. He slept in the house, but high up in the fourth story, or rather loft, which could be reached only by a staircase, such as was common in only by a staircase, such as was common in those days, outside the house wall, the old lady sleeping in a room on the ground floor at the back of the shop. It was the boy's duty to lock the shop door at night and retain the key. One morning the neighbors found the door open much earlier than usual, and as there was no one to be seen in the shop some of them, suspecting that all was not right, went in. There were no marks betokening a violent entry, but the old lady was discovered dead in her bed, having re-The party hastened to the edge of the cliff.
