Poetry.

Wanted—A Little Girl.

Where have they gone to—the little girls,
With natural manners and natural curls,
Who love their dollies and like their toys,
And talk of something besides the boys?

Little old women in plenty I find,
Mature in manners and old of mind;
Little old flirts who talk of their "beaux"
And vie with each other in stylish clothes.

Little old belles, who, at nine and ten,
Are sick of pleasure and tired of men,
Weary of travel, of balls, of fun—
And find no new thing under the sun.

Once, in the beautiful long ago,
Some dear little children I used to know;
Girls who were merry as lambs at play,
And laughed and rollicked the live-long day.

They thought not at all of the "style" of their clothes,
They never imagined that boys were "beaux"—
"Other girls' brothers" and "mates" were they;
Splendid fellows to help them play.

Where have they gone to? If you see
One of them anywhere, send her to me,
I would give a medal of purest gold
To one of those dear little girls of old,
With an innocent heart and an open smile,
Who knows not the meaning of "flirt" or "style."

—Ella Wheeler.

Select Tale.

Violet's Secret.

"I don't believe a word of it!" said Aunt Rebecca.

The wine-like glow of sunset yet illuminated the great bay-window; but the rest of the apartment was already enshrouded in the gray shadows of twilight, in whose misty indistinctness the huge chairs of carved oak looked like gigantic monsters from some foreign shore.

From the walls frowned down dark old family portraits, and the crimson hangings above the arched doors waved restlessly back and forth in the draughts of wind that swept through the vast corridor.

"I dont believe a word of it!" repeated Aunt Rebecca, with more emphasis than before. "A ghost story indeed!"

"Tell me about it, Violet," said young Hazelwood, to whom the deep bay-window, with its far-off prospect of snowy hills, veiled in gathering twilight, to say nothing of pretty Violet Orme's close vicinage, were evidently more attractive than the more modern regions of Alnwick Place.

"It is not much of a story," said Violet, flushing up to her very eyelashes at the sound of her own soft voice; "only years ago, long before my great-grandpapa built this house, the site was all one unbroken wood, and there was a tradition that a beautiful girl was murdered by her lover.

Her grave, they said, was beneath the foundations of the house; but I scarcely credit this part of the legend."

"Of course not," interrupted Miss Rebecca, with a toss of her false curls.

"I have no patience with the relics of old superstitions."

"What are you looking for, aunt?"

"Have you dropped anything? Shall I call for Harris to bring a candle?" asked Violet, a moment afterwards coming to her aunt's side.

"Nothing, nothing," said Miss Rebecca, with a little embarrassment in her voice. "Come—don't stay here any longer in the biting cold, unless you both want a week's medicine and doctor's visits."

"It is not cold, Aunt Rebecca," pleaded Violet, and the starlight is so beautiful on the stone pavement. Just let us wait until the fiery planet mounts a little higher."

But a peremptory summons from Colonel Orme himself, who had just waked from a comfortable nap beside the glowing fire in the library, to a sort of vague wonder as to "where Rebecca and the young people could possibly be," speedily settled the matter.

"Never mind' Violet, whispered Charles Hazlewood; "by-and-by, when your father has gone to his room, and aunt Rebecca is busy with her curl papers in her own special dormitory we can have a starlight stroll through the ghost's teritory!"

Violet gave him an arch glance as she tripped after Aunt Rebecca into the hall which led to Colonel Orme's brilliantly-lighted library.

"I wish Captain Hazlewood wouldn't remain out there," said Aunt Rebecca, anxiously. "He will catch his death of cold; and besides——"

"Besides what, Aunt Rebecca?"

"Violet," said the maiden lady, "I wish you would go down and see if the housekeeper has prepared that posset for my sore throat, that's a good girl. I think I shall go to bed."

Violet went down to execute her aunt's behest.

How peacefully the distant hills and valleys slept in their snowy mantles that glorious December night.

It reminded one of a lovely painting executed with brushes dipped in liquid pearl, and shaded with pencils of glimmering silver.

At least so it seemed to Charles Hazlewood, as he stood in the deep recess of the gigantic bay-window, nearly hidden by the curtains, the faded splendor of whose tarnished embroidery carried the mind unconsciously a century backward on the stream of time.

But then Charles Hazlewood was in love.

The tall, old fashioned clock in the hall was striking twelve, and the colony of crickets under the hearth-stone was falling into a dreamy, sleepy, sort of chirp, as if their small lungs were fairly wearied out when Aunt Rebecca emerged from her door, treading on tiptoe, and carrying a dim light in her hand.

Now, Aunt Rebecca, in nodding false curls, lace coiffure, an eighteen-year-old style of dress, was a very different sort of personage from Aunt Rebecca, with her head tied up in a silk handkerchief, her false curls laid aside, and a long white dressing-robe enveloping her lank figure; and the latter was by no means the more prepossessing of the two.

Probably some such consciousness swept across the good spinster's brain, for she shuffled with accelerated rapidity past the solemn eyes of the grave old family portraits on the wall.

"I am sure I dropped them somewhere here," she murmured, pausing in front of the bay-window.

"How provoking! There goes my candle out!

"But I believe I can find them, however, the starlight is so bright,

"Mercy upon us! What is that? the ghost!—the ghost!"

And Aunt Rebecca fled shrieking down the corridor, her hands clasped over her eyes, before which was imprinted the appalling vision of a tall figure sweeping past, all in white, with a crimson stain at its pallid throat!

The house was aroused into instantaneous commotion, lights flashed into brightness at the various doors, and an eager circle of enquirers surrounded Aunt Rebecca, who evinced strong symptoms of an intention to go into hysterics.

"It glided past me like a gust of wind she shrieked!" replying at hazard to the questions rained down upon her—"all in white, with that dreadful mark upon its throat!

"It's a warning—I know it's a warning that I havn't long to live! Oh, what shall I do!—what shall I do?"

"But I don't understand what you were doing out in the Ghost's Corridor at this time of the night," interrupted Colonel Orme, staring at his sister as if not quite certain whether this were an actual occurrence in real life or merely a fragmentary part of his last dream.

"Well, it you must know," said Miss Rebecca, with a little hysteric sob, "I dropped my false teeth there, just at dusk, and I didn't like to look for them, with Violet and Captain Hazlewood standing by; and so—and so——"

"O ho! that's it eh?" said Colnel Orme, laughing. "Upon my word, sister Becky, you are rather over-particular for a woman fifty years old."

"Only forty-nine, James!" interupted Miss Rebecca, with a shrill accent of indignation.

"But the ghost?" inquired young Hazlewood, who had just arrived on the scene of action, with rather a flushed brow and embarrassed air.

Upon which Aunt Rebecca gave way to the combined influences of her brother's unkind remark and the fright of ghost-seeing, and fairly fainted without further notice.

According to the usual custom of womankind on such occasions, Colonel Orme and all the other gentlemen were hustled out into the hall, while the victim of the female officials was deluged with Eau de Cologne, stifled with burnt feathers, and vigorously treated with hot flannel.

"She's coming to, poor creature!" was the final verdict hurled at Colonel Orme through a crack in the door.

"Well! I'm glad of it, I'm sure!" said the colonel, dolorously, rubbing his hands: "for it's cold out here in the hall. Why, hilloa! is this you, my little Violet? What's the matter? You haven't seen a ghost, I hope?"

"No, papa," faltered Violet; "but—"

"Suppose we three adjourn into the library, Colonel Orme, and I will undertake the task of explanation," interposed Charles Hazlewood, while Violet's cheeks grew like flame.

"Well, may I venture to enquire what all this means?" interrogated the bewildered Colonel, when the library door was safely closed.

"It means, sir," said Charles, laughing, yet a little puzzled how to proceed, "that Violet, your daughter, and I were just looking out at the stars, in the embrasure of the great hall window, when we saw someone approaching with a light.

"Violet went to see what the apparition meant, when Miss Rebecca (whom it proved to be) dropped her candle, and ran shrieking away.

"So Violet was the ghost, eh?" said the Colonel, repressing a very strong inclination to laugh.

"You see, papa," interposed that young lady, "I wore my long cashmere mantle, for I was afraid of taking cold, and it was tied at the throat with red ribbons, and ——"

"And Aunt Rebecca took it for granted that you were the murdered heroine of our family ghost story," said the Colonel, archly.

"But allow me to ask, young people, what you were so much interested in?"

"Well, sir," said Hazlewood, "I had just asked her if she wouldn't marry me—don't run away, Violet—and she said 'Yes,"—that is if I could win her father's consent."

"Well!"

"And I would like to know what her father says to the proposition?" asked the young officer, laughingly, detaining Violet, who was struggling to escape.

"He says," answered Colonel Orme, "that your intrepidity in facing the ghost deserves some reward, and he likewise supposes that his daughter must be allowed to have her own way."

"Take her, Charley, and don't spoil her! No thanks now; but let me go and see after your Aunt Rebecca."

"Papa!" whispered Violet, as he rose, with his hand on the door.

"Well, my dear?"

"Don't tell Aunt Becky that—that—"

"That you were the ghost? Just as you please."

And he went, chuckling, to inquire after his sister's health.

There is no evidence that he ever did betray Violet's secret.

Two things may be regarded as settled facts in the records of Alnwick Place—one is that Aunt Rebecca strenuously denies the existence of ghosts, and abhors the very sight of her niece's white mantle, cherry trimmings; the other is, that she is particularly careful never to pass through the solemn old haunted hall alone after sunset.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER.—During the engagement between the Scots Greys, and the riotous colliers at Crowmlin, one of the Greys was in the act of striking down a collier with his sabre:—"Hold, Alexander!" exclaimed the collier, and showing his medal, "don't you remember when I carried you wounded off the field of Waterloo?" The soldier immediately dropped his sabre, proud that he had for the first time an opportunity of testifying his gratitude to the man to whom he owed his existence. The effect may be better conceived than than described.

HIDDEN SORROWS.—Human life were a poor thing but for its hidden sorrows, its unnoted martyrdoms, its unpraised self-sacrifices. The brighter hours, with all their richness and rapture, have deep roots in the sadder ones; they grow out of these as the alder tree grows out of the depths of the valley, drawing from the dark waters the strength and the beauty that it yields to the summer sun. —M. Linskill.

Parting with Friends

Is one of the sad necessities of life, and often mark life's milestones as we travel the path from the beginning to the end. Strange to say, Dr. Scott Putnam has discovered a means by which old time friends are separated and that without a single qualm. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor promptly, painlessly and with certainty separates the oldest and most strongly cemented corns that can be found. It cannot fail, for Putnam's is sure, safe and painless. Beware of any article offered "just as good," and take only Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor.

Of all European countries Germany is the country where suicide is most frequent, and in Germany, again, Saxony takes the lead, much though the Germans of those parts are praised for their good spirits.

Don't lose your hair or go bald headed when Minard's Liniment will prevent the hair from falling and will produce a beautiful growth.

The oldest British Church now standing in America is said to be in Isle of Wight county, Virginia, between Smithfield and Suffolk. It was probably built in 1632. Its walls and tower are still strong, and promise to remain for a long time to come.

Stop that cough by using Minard's Honey Balsam. Nothing better can be used.

The wealthiest man in the world is the Chinese Banker, Han-Qua, of Canton. He pays taxes upon an estate of $450,000,000, and is estimated to be worth a billion taels, which in our money would be about fourteen hundred million dollars.—Ex.

Rheumatism is the most painful and most troublesome disease that afflicts humanity. It comes when we least expect it and when we have no time to be interviewed by it. The only reliable remedy that we ever found is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are having a magnificent car constructed in their shops for the purpose of containing an agricultural exhibit of the country. The car, when completed, will be filled with the products of the country this year, and will be sent to attend all the important fall shows in Eastern Canada and the United States. The car is forty-nine feet long, the usual width, and will be fitted up in sections, where the product of each branch of agriculture can be shown to advantage. It will be called the "Canadian Pacific Railway Exhibit Car,"

Nearly all diseases that afflict humanity originate in the stomach, liver or bowels, and might be prevented if people would use a little common sense; but they will not. They rather take Parsons' Purgative Pills because one is a dose.

A week or two ago a woman in New York started on her way to a grocery store, and locked her seven-year-old son in her room, saying: "Mind you stay quiet till I come back and I'll bring you something to eat." Instead of visiting the grocery she got drunk and was sent to prison for a month. It was not until nearly three days later that the little boy's sobs attracted attention and he was rescued from impending starvation.

There are many Cough Mixtures, but only one Allen's Lung Balsam; try it. See advt.

A singular circumstance occurred at Doherty creek last week. An old lady, Mrs. Wilkinson, aged 86 years became somewhat demented of late, occassionally wandered about the house at night, and on Wednesday morning was missed from her bed. On search being made she was found in a chest dead. She had removed the contents (a quantity of bed clothes) from the chest and got in, the chest standing against the wall, the lid had fallen down and shut her in, where she died from suffocation.—Sackville Post.

The New Zealand Government has authorized an agent to collect two hundred stoats and weasels for the purpose of thinning out the rabits in that colony. Each animal is expected to cost about $30 before it is landed.

The smallest circular saw in practical use is a tiny disk about the size of a five-cent nickel, which is employed for cutting the slits in gold pens. They are about as thick as ordinary paper, and revolve some 400 times per minute. Their high velocity keeps them rigid, notwithstanding their extreme thinness

The number of the varieties of common fruit seems astonishing to the average purchaser of the limited amount of fruit on the stands. Of the pear there are as many as 1600 kinds named in some works of horticulture; over 1500 different sorts of apples are grown; there are no fewer than 150 sorts of plums, over 100 varieties of gooseberry, and about 125 kinds of strawberry.

The tenth census shows that there are in this country 64,698, or in a round number 65,000 clergymen. Suppose, for the sake of illustration, that each one preaches two sermons a week, which is perhaps rather below than above the average, and we shall have in the course of a single year a total of 6,760,000 sermons. Further, suppose each sermon of thirty minutes duration, also perhaps less than the average length, and at the rate of a hundred words a minute, each sermon will have about 3,000 words, or twelve book pages each of 250 words and all the sermons preached every year will give a total in printed matter of 81,120,000 book pages, or 162,220 volumes of 500 pages each, while if an average congregation of fifty listen to one sermon a total of 3,300,080 worshippers is presented at a single service.

General News.

We are indebted to an address delivered by Sir Richard Temple before the British Association at Montreal for some valuable statistics respecting the British Empire. The area of the Empire Sir Richard estimates at 8,650,000 square miles, or, if we count those regions which, though not formally belonging to it, are more or less under its control, about 10,000,000 square miles, that is, one fifth of the surface of the habitable globe. Its population is 315,000,000 of whom but 45,000,000 belong to the fair races and only 46,000,000 are nominally Christians, against 60,000,000 Mahometans and 188,000,000 Hindoos. The general government of these millions costs £203,000,000 annually, of which sum one quarter is raised by direct taxation and the balance by indirect taxation. over and above this there is raised for local purposes a revenue of £61,000,000. To maintain order there are only 850,000 soldiers, 560,000 policemen, and 746 war vessles. Maritime trade is carried on in 30,000 ships, with a tonnage of 8½ millions, three millions of tons in steamers and 6½ in sailing vessels. Out of 120 millions of freight annually carried by the world's shipping, 63 millions are under the British flag, and out of an aggregate earning of 133 million pounds sterling, 73 millions are earned by British ships. Still more astonishing is it to learn that, out of 1,800,000 tons of shipping annually built, 1,200,000 are built in Great Britain. Again, about 34 per cent. of the world's commerce and about 39 per cent. of the banking is done by the British Empire, its banking capital and deposits amounting to 965 millions sterling against 1,543 millions on the part of all the rest of the world. The manufactures of the Empire, omitting those of India, which though large cannot be ascertained with any degree of accuracy, amount to 877 millions sterling, the rest of the world manufacturing to the extent of about 3,500 millions. Putting the same matter in another light, out of 7½ millions of factory steam horse power in the world 2½ millions are British. The total wealth of the Empire foots up to the colossal sum of 12,640 millions of pounds sterling. The corresponding figures for the rest of the world are not given, but for the United States they are 9,495 millions sterling. In railroads the Empire does not altogether hold its own, having but 38,000
