ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

(REGISTERED FROM THE PATENT OFFICE.)

Sometimes a child will find a little grain,
And, charmed with its live color, run in haste
To plant it in a pot of porcelain.

With dragons blue and flowers fantastic chased.

He goes. The root strikes snake-like either side,
Comes up from earth a little tree straight-
way;
Daily its fibrous feet plunge farther wide,
Until the vessel shivers, on a day.

The child returns. It sees, all marvelling,
The sword like plant where was the broken pot.

He fain would tear it up: the strong stems strain.

He strives: his fingers bleed; he moves it not.

There live has budded in my wondering heart.
I thought to sow some Spring flower; but see
An old and strong root has wrenched apart
The pot of porcelain painted wondrously.
—London Spectator.
