MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cent's, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

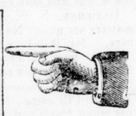
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.



CURE

Sick Headache and relieve all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills makes a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them. In vials at 25 cents; five for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere, or sent by mail.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved his darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude?" Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."

150 West 125th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the best effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 15, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and I often ... with terrible pain and no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. ... but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. T. BIRD."

Talledine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Poetry.

What is Heaven?

"What is Heaven?" I asked a little child:
"All joy!" and in her innocence smiled.

I asked the aged, with her cares oppressed
"All suffering o'er, Oh! Heaven, at last is rest!"

I asked a maiden, meek and tender-eyed:
"It must be love?" she modestly replied.

I asked the artist, who adored his art:
"Heaven is all beauty!" spoke his raptured heart.

I asked the poet, with his soul afire:
"Tis glory—glory?" and he struck his lyre.

I asked the christain, waiting her release:
A halo round her, low she murmured:
"Peace?"

So all may look with hopeful eyes above,
'Tis beauty, glory, joy, rest, peace and love!

Select Tale.

Two St. Valentine's Days.

A POSTMAN'S STORY.

"As I was saying, it was St. Valentine's Day, 1873. My route was from seventh to Twelfth on Spruce Street. The locality was a good deal more fashionable than now, and some very high-toned folks lived there. We won't mention no names, nor give no numbers, but the particular young lady I'm going to tell you about lived just about Tenth street. I had a pretty big load, and was in the best of temper with my work, but when a beautiful young lady opened the door herself in eagerness to get the large envelope, which was addressed to her, and smiled her thanks at me, I felt a different man. Nor did I feel the worse after the hot cup of coffee, which a servant girl had ready for me, as instructed by the young lady, for it was a bitter raw morning, and the bullet wound in the shoulder, which I got at the second battle of Bull Run, was twitchin very bad. Now a postman can't help noticing his betters a bit. Everybody hasn't got letter-boxes to drop 'em in—of course, I am referring to routes of private houses—and you are often kept waiting a half minute or so at the door. The things I have read on post cards are a caution, I can tell you. A postman learns a good deal, accidently, about other people's affairs—but to come back to the young lady.

I took an interest in her from that 14th of February, and generally glanced at her envelopes. She got a good many, but nearly all were in ladies' handwriting; letters from girl friends and invitations to balls and receptions, and such like I guess. The exceptions were letters, in a bold masculine handwriting, all written by the same man; there was no mistake about that. At first I brought them once a week and then, after a little while, once and sometimes twice a day. She often took them in herself, and I always felt happy for the rest of the day. Her bright smile sort of went through me. Once or twice I received a letter from her to post to him, I was sure, not that she told me so, but I could tell it by she way she blushed when she handed them to me. I looked at the address and name. It was a broker on Third street. On the June following the Vallentine's day, the family went away and did not return from out of town until October, but I did not see the young lady nor did I have any letters for her. 'Hasn't she returned yet?' I asked the colored waiter. 'Oh, no; she is on the "continong" with her husband. They were married at Newport in August. 'Oh,' says I. And I thought no more of the matter; events had taken their natural course by ending in marriage, as all properly regulated love letters ought to do.

"She came back with her husband at Christmas, and began housekeeping in the same square as her family, so I delivered her letters. She saw me on New Year's day, and did not forget me, either. What she gave me was sufficient to buy my wife a warm cloak for winter, with enough left over for a pair of shoes for the baby. The newly married couple had a heap of letters of all sorts, kinds and descriptions, Invitations in any number for both of them, and plenty of female correspondence for her. He seemed to get letters from all parts of the world; between them they had more than the rest of the square put together. There seemed to be a change in April. The envelopes of the letters had the names of storekeepers on them, and doubtless contained bills. The following month similiar letters came very thickly indeed, and so did letters with the names of lawyers on the upper right hand corner of the envelopes. He seemed to be always at home for he often came to the door himself and took the letters from me, as if anxious for the servants not to see them. A good looking man he was with a proud manner and a dissipated face.

"We are going away to morrow," said the colored servant one morning, as I handed him the customary batch.

"Out of town?" I asked,

"Out of dis town, I guess," he replied with a grin. "The sheriff's officers are in the house."

"When I was delivering the letters next day a hack drove up to the door, and I lingered out of curiosity. The lady came down leaning on her husband's arm, looking so miserable and altered I hardly recognized her. She must have recognized the expression on my face, for she bowed and smiled; but such a ghost of a smile! A few days afterward the things in the house were sold by auction, and new people came to live there; and soon, amid the many thoughts of life, I forgot the young lady.

"It was in the summer of 1877, when I got put on a route to Germantown. I was not very well and thought the country walking would do me good, so I changed routes, with the permission of the post master, with a comrade who worked, as I said, in Germantown. Sorting out my letters, as I served one of the pretty, leafy avenues, I came across one addressed to the old, familiar name, Mrs. ——, and in the husband's hand-writing. The post-mark was Colorado, and he was away, that was evident. She was sitting on the porch of a pretty little cottage with a child in her arms. It was easy to see she was no longer rich. The dresses of herself and child, and the smallness and dirtiness of the servant maid, who was cleaning a parlor window, denoted the fact at a glance; but she did not look unhappy, and she knew me at once.

"What, postman," she exclaimed, "is it possible it can be you?"

"She took it from me with the old eagerness, and as she turned to go into the house I noticed her pressing it to her lips. He didn't write very often to her—every two or three weeks, not more, while sometimes much longer intervals elapsed. It used to make me quite miserable when I noticed her pleading face as I passed morning after morning without anything for her.

"You are quite sure you have not got one, postman?" she would ask.

"Quite sure, ma'am. The Western mail is late to day—not delivered till tomorrow," was my faltering excuse.

"Christmas Day arrived, and I had not delivered a letter from her husband since the middle of October. She no longer came to the door now. The little servant girl told me her mistress was nearly always very sick. At last I brought a letter from Colorado on the last day of the year; and then I delivered one regularly twice a week, until February. The lady began to come to the door again looking something like her former bright self.

"The 14th of February, Valentine's Day, came round and I had a Colorado letter for the lady, but it was not in her husband's hand-writing. She came to the door.

"Here's a valentine, ma'am," says I cheerily. "I hope it will make you as happy as the one I delivered to you in Spruce street five years ago."

"Thank you, postman," she replied, "and I have got a hot cup of coffee for you."

"She took the letter, eyed it curiously and opened it with trembling fingers. I was watching her while sipping the coffee—a glance at the contents and she fell back lifeless. The little Irish girl came up immediately and between us we carried the lady in the parlor and laid her on the sofa. Then I took up my mail bag, for, of course, I could not wait, and continued my delivery. A few houses away lived a doctor, and I told his servant that there was a sick lady who required medical aid. I had no letters for the cottage the next morning, but the little servant rushed out to tell me the lady was dying, and that the letter from Colorado was from a police justice, saying the husband had run away with a woman to Australia, taking with him a large sum of money he had stolen from his employers. The letter also said it was supposed where he was working, that the woman who was his companion, was married to him, until a search among the defaulter's papers disclosed the existence of a wife in Philadelphia. Before the week had closed, there was a bow of crape on the cottage door, and the doctor's certificate said, "Died of a broken heart.—

"Have you got a match about you, sir; my pipe has gone out?" and the postman trudged off homeward with his mate, the letter-sorter.

LAWYERS' MORALS.—A lawyer ought to be a gentleman. His function as an attorney gives him no dispensation to disregard the ordinary rules of good manners, and the ordinary principles of decency and honour. He has no right to slander his neighbour, even if his neighbour be the defendant in a cause in which he appears for the plantiff. He has no right to bully or browbeat a witness in cross examination, or artfully entrap that witness into giving false testimony. Whatever the privelege of the court may be, the lawyer who is guilty of such practices in Court is no gentleman out of Court. A lawyer ought not to lie. He may defend a a criminal who he knows to be guilty, but he may not say to the jury that he believes this criminal to be innocent. He may not in any way intentionally convey to the jury the impression that he believes the man to be innocent. He may not in his plea pervert or distort the evidence so as to weaken the force or conceal the meaning of it. He is a sworn officer of the Court, and his oath should bind him to the strictest veracity. It would be quixotic to expect him to assist his adversity, but his obligation to speak the truth outranks every obligation that he owes his client. It is notorious that some lawyers who would think it scandalous to tell a falsehood out of Court, in any business transaction, lie shamelessly in Court in behalf of their clients, and seem to think it part of their professional duty. That bar of justice before which, by their professional obligations, they are bound to the most stringent truthfullness, is the very place where they seem to consider themselves absolved from the common law of veracity. So long as the legal mind is infected with this deadly hersey, we need not wonder that our Courts of justice often become the instruments of unrighteousness.—Century Magazine.

REST DAYS.—Everybody ought to have one rest day a week. Without it the world grows into a mere mill, a mill in which the wheels are always going round, until a man's life seems crushed out of him. Whatever may be thought of the ten commandments, there is no doubt that they contain injunctions the wisdom of which has worn well for at least six or seven thousand years. It is better to live an honest life, to be moral, and to respect the old, than to either be or do the opposite. And it is better, too, to keep the Sabbath Day, and to rest therein, than to toil and slave seven days a week. The Jews, in keeping their own Sabbath, and generally ours, too, have demonstrated, that the loss of one, and generally two, days in the seven does not decrease a man's wealth in the long run. No community is so wealthy as the Jewish community, and yet, though good and ill repute, they have always sacrificed the Saturday of the Gentile to their belief, notwithstanding that the Gentile took another day for that purpose himself, and so put an end to the business with the Jews for another four and twenty hours. The connection between successful work and rest is a subtle one, but the Jews have proved that a large proportion of the latter, every week, has not affected their business, and that riches may be amassed by people who keep two Sundays instead of one.

Miss Cleveland is said to be much opposed to dancing. Office-seeking Democrats who have been dancing attendance upon the President for two or three weeks know how to sympathize with the lady.—Boston Transcript.

The choir of the Methodist church, Fredericton, now boasts a cornet player as one of its members.

History Repeats Itself.

And perhaps in the distant future when the ages have grown old, and move with slow and failing steps down the corridors of time—when the adjuncts and appliances that now make life endurable are forgotten, how gladly will the people hail the re-discovery of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, the great and only sure pop corn cure of this age. Without a rival for efficacy or painless action, certain in every case and yet perfectly harmless to every other part, surely its loss would be felt in future ages as keenly as its value is now appreciated by all in this. Try Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Sure and safe. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprietors.

The fine steamer State of Maine, belonging to the International Co., which was wrecked nearly a year ago, has been rebuilt and is now again on the route between Boston and St. John.
