Poetry.
I Shall Be Satisfied.
Not here, not here! not where the sparkling Falls into sparkling sands as we draw near;
When in the wilderness each step falls,
"I shall be satisfied," but O not here!
Not here, where all the dreams of bliss deceive us,
Where the warm spirit never gains the goal;
Where, hunted ever by the thought that
drives us,
Across the fields of bitter memory rolls.
There is a land where every pulse is thrilling With nature's power, where the weary heart is glad,
Where the spirit finds its rest and home,
And peacefully its time-tossed currents
flow.
For out of sight, while yet the flesh inhabits
us,
That these few words, "I shall be satisfied,"
shall be.
Satisfied! Satisfied! The spirit yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred souls,
The silent love that here must not returning,
The inspiration which no language finds,
The peace that only the soul's vague
longing,
The thing which nothing earthly can fill;
Oh! what desires upon the heart throng,
As I look upward to the heavenly home.

When in the wilderness each step falls,
"I shall be satisfied," but O not here!
Not here, where all the dreams of bliss de-
ceive us,
Where the warm spirit never gains the goal;
Where, hunted ever by the thought that
drives us,
Across the fields of bitter memory rolls.
There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
With nature's power, where the weary heart is
glad,
Where the spirit finds its rest and home,
And peacefully its time-tossed currents
flow.
For out of sight, while yet the flesh inhabits
us,
That these few words, "I shall be satisfied,"
shall be.
Satisfied! Satisfied! The spirit yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred
souls,
The silent love that here must not returning,
The inspiration which no language finds,
The peace that only the soul's vague
longing,
The thing which nothing earthly can fill;
Oh! what desires upon the heart throng,
As I look upward to the heavenly home.
