OUR SOUTHERN LETTER Scuthern Pines, N.C., June 10, 1885. One of the strangest and funniest sights bat a man from the north can possibly behad is to see for the first time a solemn darkey and his bosom friend, so to speak-a mule-chasing a light southern plow around through the yielding, sandy soil, around and around a ten acre lot. I can imagine that E-win Russell, the poet, saw such a sight previous to writing his " Nebuchadnezzan." I think I can see him now sitting on the topmost rail of the national rail fence, jotting dewn an occasional note in the log-book of memory, while " Neb" addresses the conscien-

Another round of the mellow lot is made. The darkey's eyes shine with pleasure as they glance from the poet to the mule. Perhaps he muses of the "heaps" of peas, potatoes, squashes and other good things that will pro-

There is an intellectual compromise between them, something like a mutual understanding, and a grin embellishes the open countenance of the darkey as he softly sings his satisfaction :-Dar, dat's de way to do it! He's comin' right down to it; Just watch him plowin' t'roo it;
