"Say not my heart is cold. Because of a silent tongu. The lute of a faultless mould In silence oft hath hung. The fountain soonest spent Doth babble down the steep But the stream that ever went Is silent, strong, and deep.'

The state of man is such that his ex istence can (depending upon circumstances) be either surfeited with pleasure or just the reverse, so soon as there dawns upon the horizon of his little world of feelings that creature in whom he can see perfection only; and who inspires in him that love of the soul which expands beyond the capacity of the huma i holy, so that it pervades the atmosphere in ho eyed bliss, in fancy painting pictures of the adored on wherever the eye may choose to roam imparting a charm to the life, which, without actual experience, cannot be he can think and do good only.

Such were the feelings, governed by the latter of two results, that had taken fast hold upon the heart of the Rev John Craigle, curate of Ravensdale, one of the most important parishes, yet the hardest to deal within North W____ Indeed, so difficult was the work, an so small the salary, which depended altogether upon the subscriptions of the people, who were by no means liberal.

that four or five clergy who had at different times been stationed there, were obliged to give up, and seek easier work in morerem unerative parishes. But when young Craigle, who been labouring at deacon in an adjacent parish for nearly a year, and who often went there to conduct services, presented himself before the bishop to be admitted as priest, his Lordship saw, in the pale sweet face and tender eyes of the man before him, a predom nonce of that apirit which no amount of work could quell and a countenance that would solicit the sympathies and respect of the most careless of Christians. He therefore conceived the very wise plan of sending him, although he was but 24 years of age, to plead with the stubborn people of Riversdale; which

Among them all, no one was more pleased at his advent than squire Thorne, who, if truth be told, had most to do in raising the salary connected with the living; if, perhaps, we except the squire's daughter, Alice, who, when she beheld the noble countenance, and listened to the strong clear voice, of the preacher, travels for a Boston crockery house, of the church on the occassion of his first visit, and afterwards dined with them at Thorne Hall, formed a very exessened in his after visits.

" Hi, there! Don't throw away that sosp suds! I want it down at the bed! Of course, being a Northern man, and chuck up full of curiosity, I naturally wanted to know what in the name of feather ticks and straw bolsters any human being could want of a whole wash tub full of soap suds at his bed. Spap sude at a bed seemed as relevant as a clown at a funeral or a fiddler A little investigation unraveled the mys-

If there is a State in the whole Union where the natural advantages of location. soi! and climate are any better than are those of the Old North State, I do not know which one it is. To the man of modest means who has the grit to face fate and demand his share of the good things that nature kindly spreads out on every hand and hangs on every bush, here is the ideal of his dream. If he has been a resident of the short and the range of crops limited, he is delighted to find that here he can raise everything be can raise in the North, besides countless other things that in the North he Ask your Tonsorial Artist to keep a bottle of would never attempt to produce.
