Our Queen and Constitution

The Silver Mist. 've read somewhere in story In some half forgutten tale, Of a picture on the ocean Framed with a f ggv veil-With a picture dim, uncertain. With the twilight overspread. And the sea clouds dritting whitely To the pale mo n overhead. And yet I can well remember, How in fancy I could list

To the rushing waters.

On waves gem tipped and flashing With their diamond spray fling wide, Toesed a tiny boat all lonely. Like a shell upon the tide. And within its frail heart resting. As the sea-life in its cell. A single soul was swaving On the dark bing billow's swell; While methooght I saw his features, Sadely wan and white and ir st, Moaning through the selver mist.

As he strove to pierce the distance Shrouded in the silver mist. And the ocean world grew colder When the night time chased the day, And the sobbing sea rolled higher When the wild wind dashed the spray, And forever and forever. Far across the heavy plain,

The opal shades flaw scudding With their breath like chilly rain; While a thousand unseen monsters Drew closer round, and hissed The warning forth of danger Hidden 'neath the silver mist. But when the hour was darkest,

And all help seemed far away. And the storm-tossed one looked upward Clasped his hands and trie I to pray, Lo! above him from the shadows Burst a gleam of brillant light Flash'd the silver mist to golden. Splendour flushing in the night. And from out the hallow floating. With her holy brow star-kissed Bent a white-robed angel, smiling Down upon him through the mist. So. I think on Life's wide ozean,

With our harques befogged and lost, Can we live when sor ow-tossed. Only wait, weit for the glimmer Through the shades to show the way Where the angel burs s esunder Darkness with hor starry ray. Only wait and hok beyond life-Oaly wait and only list Till the good thip Hope bears downwards. Sailing through the silver mist.

A late March twilight, with a bifter frost in the air, the in non just dipping its golden horn behind the maple swamp in the west, and the ground sounding crisply under foot. We had just come in from foddering the cattle-"we" sounds rather singularly when you reflect that it meant Kitty and me' two girls of seventeen and nineteen; but you see there wasn't any one else to do it, Father had been bed ridden ever since the last sttack of paralysis, and we could afford to hire no one to take his place about the farm.

"I don't pity them gals," Neighbor Dyson said, "They might sell the horse and cow." Neighbor Dyson had generally offered us something else than half price for them, thinking no doubt that we would be thankful to jump at the chance. But

Kitty and I, after taking the matter into Mooley, could we, Addy," said my sister, there are so many nice dishes we can make for poor father, if we have plenty of good, rich milk and cream. And the butter that we should have to buy at Neighbor Dyson's city prices would go far to counterbalance the money we should get for Mooley." "As for the horse," said I, " he eats but a little; and how on earth could we get around the country, even to the postoffice, such weather as this, if it wasn't for old Dobbin, that we have had ever since I can remember.

So it happened that on this especial March evening we had just come in from attending the wants of our live stock. I was in great spirits, playing with pussy, who came to meet us with her plumy tail erect; but Kitty leaned sadly against the wooden mantel and looked into the fire with mournful eyes. "Kitty," eried I, at last, "What does
