An Invader. NOT THE FENIANS.

Hark, the enemy's advancing, Fierce invader in our land! See ye not his weapons glancing, Hear his tread on every hand. He, our Foe, is strong and cruel; Rouse, ve offspring of the free, Will ye lie in senseless slumber And his mighty havoc see?

Look about ye, son and father, He is surely very near; Hark! oh, daughter, sister, mother Has he seized none to thee dear? Yet the cries go up to Heaven, Cries of mother, sister, wife, Calling on the God of mercy,-"Save the one more dear than life.

"Save my child from this dark bondage, Soul and body both enchained, Of my son once glad and gallant But a wretched slave remains " llear a daughter's cry ascending,-"Once I had a father kind, But the Foe relentless grasped him In those triple chains to bind."

See the Foe remorseless binding A loved Brother, make him free!' Every one in this fair country, Wronged and robbed is by this foe, Some of money, learning, kindred, Some of love and life below;

Hear the sister's fervent pleading:

"Heavenly Father, look on me,

Some, alas, of souls undying. Will we stand and let them die? No, but, this dread Foe defying, Raise the war cry fierce and high Down with our dear ones' destroyer, Strike him down on every hand, Rest not, brother, Right is mighty, Let us drive him from our land.

Him for whom our Saviour died, Join the army of deliverers, Fight upon the Temperance side. Wave not flags of truce so pallid, Have no faint heart's compromise; Onward, onward to the battle Till the Traffic lifeless lies; Till we see no Christ-bought brother, In the Rum Trade's galling yoke,

C me, each one who loves his neighbor,

With a heart which wine cups broke. Till our prison cells are emp'y Of the criminals Rum gave; Till no orphan's cry ariseth O'er a father's rum-dug grave.

Till we find no mother weeping,

Down with Rum, the worst invader, Vilest foe of our dear land It is near us, striking deadly, Cruel blows on every hand. Let us each rise up to battle, Work and pray that Right may win; Let us never grow faint-hearted, Fight for country, life and kin.

Rouse, ye men who are called freemen, Drive the curse far, far away, Work each hour of health and action, And whilst breathing, ever pray.
