Select Tale.

Marrying an Heiress.

The twilight, stealing softly through the heavy silk window draperies of the library at Abbott Court, became transformed into a sort of crimson duskiness—the clear, low burning fire glimmered like coral, all aglow—and the ruddy sparks that betoken the whereabouts of the two gentlemen and their chairs shone steadily from the cushions and chairs on either side of the hearth. Dinner was just over—the clock in the hall had chimed seven—and Mr. Abbott and his distant cousin and adopted son were alone together.

"My dear Gerald, you must be weary," said the elder gentleman in a tone of great, though repressed, irritation.

"My dear Mr. Abbott, I never was more sane in my life!"

"But just look at the advantages of the thing! I tell you she is young and pretty, with an independent fortune in her own right."

"May I never sink so low as to become a fortune-hunter!" ejaculated Gerald fiercely.

"Bah—nonsense! and Berkeley and I have both set our hearts upon it!"

"Mr. Abbott, I would rather walk up to a cannon's mouth than have a wife thrust at me in that sort of way—it is repellent to every manly feeling of nature."

"I only ask you to see her, Gerald—she is coming to New York in a week and—"

"The elder gentleman fired up instantaneously.

"Gerald I forbid you taking any such foolish steps, at the peril of being turned out of my house!"

Gerald colored. "Mr. Abbott, you have been very kind to me for years, I feel that I owe you almost a son's duty and allegiance—but in this matter I cannot be dictated to by you."

"Take your choice, sir," ejaculated Mr. Abbott, who had now wrought himself into a passion; "if I leave my wishes and protection, or comply with my wishes about this young lady, I give you all to-morrow morning to think it over."

Gerald was silent; he could not trust himself to speak—and it was a relief to him when Mr. Abbott rose, and left the room.

Next morning when the coffee and newspaper were brought in, Gerald made his appearance, only a note instead thanking his benefactor for the uninterrupted kindness of years, and announcing his intention, for the future, to depend on his own exertions for a livelihood rather than to contract a marriage so opposed to all his wishes and predilections!

Mr. Abbott read the note through, with a contemptuous "humph!" then tore it in little pieces.

"The young scamp!" he muttered he will be back fast enough, I warrant me.
Earning one's own living isn't such an easy affair to a man who has been brought up as he has, and so he'll find it. I shall not be so easily deceived again."

Nevertheless, the old house seemed very sad and lonely without the light footsteps and cheerful voice of the adopted son.

"I didn't know I was so fond of him," said the old lady, who had been sitting in the parlour, looking at the note with a more foreboding than usual expression, but he may go his own way for all me."

Meanwhile, Gerald, full of ambition and spirit, was sitting in a dismal hotel parlor, where the chimney smoked and the paper was peeling off the wall in mounds of spots, taking down various memoranda from the advertising columns of the newspaper.

"Among all these 'wants' I should like to find one to satisfy one of my two chiefest aims," he exclaimed gaily, "I am ready and willing to work."

"Jones & Cobb," the first place he called at, looked dubiously over their four spectacles at the young applicant; a young man who could not bring solid references from his last place."

"Solomon & Co.," the next on the list, "wanted no raw hands, and politely inquired if he had any."

"Parker & Swift," a gift enterprise establishment, required a deposit of one hundred dollars—an item which Gerald did not happen to possess.

Arkham & Markham, light and easy play turned out to be that of a heavy porter; and the "splendid opportunity to realize a fortune," in which Gerald had unconsciously built many hopes, was to peddle from door to door a newly-invented variety of blacking.

Footsore and weary the young man returned to his hotel, late at night, with thoughts and ideas by no means so serene as when he sailed forth, and serious cogitations on the subject of taking cheap lodgings.

It was not so easy to obtain a money-making situation in New York as he had supposed.

So passed away a week—ten days—a fortnight, and he was as far as ever from obtaining a situation where to earn his daily bread, while his slender stock of funds was fast decreasing, and his spirits beginning to sink in proportion, vague thoughts of enlisting or working his passage across the seas in some great American vessel—of seeking employment in the country as a farm hand were passing through his mind, when one morning his eye caught the following advertisement:

A Voice from London.

Repeats the oft-repeated story that Putnam's Fairbank's Corn Extractor is the best, least harmful, most certain and prompt of all preparations ever introduced for the removal of corns. Kenneth & Callard, London, Ont., writes: "Nothing Putnam's Fairbank's Corn Extractor has ever introduced has given the satisfaction that we have experienced in using it. It is a valuable remedy for the removal of corns, and is sold by druggists and dealers in medicines everywhere. Putnam & Co., proprietors, Kingston. Always safe, harmless and sure."

The Massachusetts Congregational Sunday School Convention has resolved to abandon the use of the Old Testament.

Ayer's Hair Vigor improves the beauty of the hair and promotes its growth. It imparts an attractive appearance, a delightful and lasting fragrance. While it stimulates the roots, cleanses the scalp, and adds elegance to the hair, its effects are enduring; and thus it proves itself to be the best and cheapest article for toilet use.

"I HAVE NO APPETITE,"—then use Estey's Iron and Quinine Tonic, and note the improvement after a few doses.

An Italian admiral has invented a shrapnel shell for the 100 ton gun; at 30 yards from the enemy's ship it bursts, throwing seventy-five smaller projectiles, which in turn burst, scattering in fan shape a thick shower of balls and fragments with terrible destructive effect.

If you are troubled with Impure Blood then use Estey's Iron and Quinine Tonic; it will in a short time cleanse the blood and soothe the nerves so as to make life enjoyable and happy. Try it. For sale by all Druggists.
