HALL'S

HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

Poetry.

Nobody Really Cares.

Harper's Weekly

If you have anything to grieve you,
And fill your heart with fear;
If poverty hides near you,
And your dear eyes are dimmed with tears;
If you find with soul despairing
No answer to your prayers,
Don't say a word about it, for
Nobody really cares.

If health and strength forsake you,
And pain and sickness bring
A gloom that clouds the sunshine
And shadows everything;
If you feel that lot so weary
But seldom mortal bears,
Don't say a word about it, for
Nobody really cares

This world is full of pleasure,
And take it at its best.
'Tis sadly bored unless you
Meet it with smiles and jests;
It yawns o'er wants complainings,
At sorrow coldly stares,
So never tell your troubles, for
Nobody really cares.

Select Tale.

A MYSTERIOUS MARK.

"Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean—roll!" shouted a cheerful-looking passenger, casting a patronizing glance at a billowy waste on whose heaving bosom our good ship was tossed like a plaything.

"Roll, and be hanged to it, if only it wouldn't roll me!" grumbled I.

It was my first acquaintance with Neptune, and we didn't get on well together. To say the truth, I was in no amiable mood. I had disagreed with the steward about the quality of the steak he had sent me for breakfast, and, finally had disagreed with my breakfast itself, and then had parted company with it. while leaning over the taffrail at this point, my feelings were harrowed by the poetical passenger's quotation.

"You're sea-sick, he remarked.

"I see I am," I replied gruffly, intending no pun, but a slight criticism on the self-obviousness of the statement.

"I've a sovereign specific for that malady,' said the stranger.

"You're a lucky man!" groaned I.

"I would be most happy to furnish you with it," he replied. "I have an abundant supply of it with me,"

"Anything! I—I'll take anything—even arsenic, if it's only enough to put me out of my misery," I said.

"Come below," said he, taking my arm.

When we had descended the stairs he inquired: "Where is your state-room?" I led the way to it. "Now lie down, and I'll fix you up directly," he said. I threw off my coat and boots and tumbled into my berth. The benevolent gentleman went out and returned quickly with something which he put into a glass with some water and gave me to drink. I swallowed it without a question. The effect was almost instantaneous. A gentle languor stole over me, and then followed what a little before I should have hailed as the acme of all bliss, complete unconsciousness. Whether it was the effect of the medicine, or because it was the weather—much obliged to the weather, if it was it—had changed, I know not, but when I awoke I found myself, if not recovered, at least convalescent. Next day I gained my sea-legs, and felt no inconvenience. Mr. Rollickson—by which name I learned to know my Byronic benefactor—and myself grew to be great friends. He was an inexhaustible talker. With men he was an agreeable companion; with ladies he was fascinating, captivating. We had an exquisite young creature on board scarcely out of her teens, on her way to join an elderly maiden aunt in an English town, said to have testamentary designs on her, which, if carried out, would place her in the front of matrimonial prizes. To this young lady Mr. Rollickson paid especial court. He read, talked and quoted poetry to her, till her pretty little head was turned; and before the voyage was over their engagement began to be the talk of the ship. Stress of weather made the passage a slow one. It was more than two weeks after we lost sight of the highlands of Neversink before we landed at Liverpool. I had hardly set foot on shore, and hadn't had time to congratulate myself on the fact, when a hand was laid on my shoulder.

"You must go with me," said a determined voice in my ear. I turned about quickly and found myself confronted by a man who might have sat for a Dickens' portrait of Inspector Bucket.

"The fewer words here the better," he said, as I was about to speak. "Will you come quietly, or shall I summon assistance?"

I demanded an explanation.

"You shall have it in due time," was the answer. "Do you intend to come peaceably or not?"

A short staff surmounted by a crown, produced by the speaker, convinced me he had authority to enforce my obedience, and I walked along by his side. "Your name is Roach," said a thin sharp man, into whose presence I was ushered.

"It is not," I answer.

"Probably you will also deny having three stars tattooed on the back of your left arm, just below the elbow?" he added, sardonically.

"I do deny it; I bear no such mark," I said.

"That is easily tested," was the reply.

"Turn up his sleeve, Jarvis." The assistant obeyed.

"I think we have the right man," said the latter.

"Quite sure of it," replied the sharp man, after glancing at the exposed number. I twisted my arm so as to get a view of the part in question, and was utterly amazed to find the mark described by the officer.

"I—I never saw it before," I stammered confusedly.

"Such statements will do you but little good," said the officer. First, you deny your name, and next the existence of a mark, which it is impossible for you to have borne upon your person without knowing it. It so happens that this is the very mark, by which we are instructed to identify Roach, the famous bank robber, for whose arrival we have been some time watching. It further happens that your appearance tallies with his description in other respects."

"All this is inexplicable," said I, helplessly.

"Except on the theory that we've got the right man," the other answered.

I was a total stranger, had no friends to call on for assistance. If I could only find Rollickson! A thought flashed upon me. He had gone ashore before me, and I had seen him in private conversation with a man whom I now identified with the one who had arrested me. I remembered, too, that after awakening from the sleep into which I had been cast by the drug with which he had relieved me from sea-sickness, my arm had felt sore and stiff for several days. Might not Rollickson be the real Roach, and might he not have taken advantage of my stupor to place upon me a mark similar to that borne by himself; and had he not on landing pointed me out to the detectives as the object of their search, for the purpose of averting attention from himself? To this conclusion my mind came by one of those sudden intuitions, which oftimes instantaneously produce deeper conviction than the most careful process of reasoning. Just then a cab passed the window, and in it came Rollickson himself.

"Stop that man! I exclaimed starting up, and pointing him out. The exclamation astonished those present.

"Quick, quick, for heaven's sake!" I cried.

Impelled by my earnestness, a couple of policemen darted into the street. The cabman stopped in answer to their call, and soon Rollickson was escorted into the room in which I was a prisoner. He turned pale at the sight of me.

"Strip his arm!" I cried eagerly.

He drew back as an officer approached, and it was only after a struggle, and by main force, that he was compelled to submit to the inspection, which revealed a mark the exact counterpart of that found upon myself. Before I had finished the narrative of my acquaintance with Rollickson, and the circumstances under which it began, an American detective entered the office, and fully identified my late friend as the criminal for whom I had been singularly mistaken. I may add that when the blonde wig and the whiskers were removed, with which he had disguised himself, the likeness between Rollickson and myself was quite marked.

I was released from custody, and the real Roach detained in my stead. The next steamer carried him back to America, to stand his trial for numerous burglaries. And the young lady, it is to be hoped, was cured of the romance of falling in love with strangers at first sight.

A TRUE CHRISTIAN HOME.—What scene of family dignity is more to be admired? The highest splendors of wealth and show have but a feeble glow worm look in comparison—a pale faint glimmer of light, a phosphorescent halo enveloping what is only a worm. Even the poor laboring man, thanking God at his table for the food he earned—the toil of yesterday; singing still each morning in his family hymn of the glorious rest at hand; moving not thitherward with his children by single day's journeys of prayer and praise; teaching them, even as the eagles do their young, to spread their wings with him and rise—this man, I say, is the prince of God in his house, and the poor garb on which he kneels outshines the robes of palaces. Religion leads in the day as the dawn leads in the morning. It blends a heavenly gratitude with the joys of the table: it breathes a cheerful sense of God into all the works and empers of the house; it softens the pillow for rest when the day's work is done. Home and religion are sacred words—names both of love and reverence; home, because it is the seat of religion; religion, because it is the sacred element of home.

THE HIGHEST LIFE.—Beautiful is old age—beautiful as the slow-dropping mellow autumn of a rich glorious summer. In the old man nature has fulfilled her work, and she rocks him softly away to a grave, to which he is followed with blessing. God forbid we should not call it beautiful. It is beautiful but not the most beautiful. There is another life, hard, rough, and thorny, trodden with bleeding feet and aching brow, the life of which the cross is the symbol: a battle which no peace follows on this side the grave; which the grave gapes to finish before the victory is won; and—strange that it should be so—this is the highest life of man. Look back along the great names of history; there is none whose life has been other than this. They to whom it has been given to do the really highest work on this earth—whoever they are, Jew or Gentile, Pagan or Christian, warriors, legislators, philosophers, priests, poets, kings, slaves—one and all, their fate has been the same—the same bitter cup has been given to them to drink.—J. A. Froude.

SHE CAUGHT HIM.—A certain lady suspected her husband was in the habit of kissing the cook, a pretty German girl, by the by, and resolved to detect him in the act. After watching four days, she heard him come in one evening and gently pass through into the kitchen.—Now, Katie was out that evening, and the kitchen was dark. Burning with jealousy, the wife took some matches in her hand and, hastily placing her shawl over her head, as Katie often did, she entered the kitchen by the back door, and was almost immediately seized and embraced and kissed in the most ardent manner. With her heart almost bursting with rage and jealousy, the injured wife prepared to administer a terrible rebuke to her faithful spouse. ODE TO THE OYSTER.—Let us royster in the shorter days and moister that are brought by brown September with its roguish final R; for breakfast or supper, on the under shell or upper, of dishes he's the daisy, and of shell-fish he's the star. We try him as they fry him, and even as they pie him; we 're partial to him luscious in a roast; we boil him and we broil him, we vinegar-and-oil him, and oh, he is delicious stewed with toast. We eat him with tomatoes and the salad with potatoes, nor look him o'er with horror when he follows the cold slaw; and neither does he fret us if he marches after lettuce and abreast of cayenne pepper when his majesty is raw. So welcome with September, to the knife and glowing ember, juicy darling of our painties dispossesser of the clam! To the oyster, then, a hoister; with him, in royal royster we shall whoop it through the land of heather jam.

He has built, close by the Vatican, a cholera hospital, capable of accommodating 200 patients and fitted with every appliance the latest discoveries of science shows to be desirable. Patients, when admitted, are at once divested of their clothing, which is thrown into a "disinfection canal." They are then taken up stairs by hydraulic elevator and placed each in a room by himself. Each room contains vapor and hot-water baths. Patients in a state of collapse are put into a hermetically closed glass room filled with steam.
