Poetry.
Room at the Top
Never you mind the crowd, lad,
Nor fancy your life won't tell;
The work is done for all that,
To him who doeth it well.
Fancy the world a hill, lad,
Look where the millions step;
You'll find the crowd at the base, lad,
But there's always room at the top.
Courage and faith and patience!
There's space in the old world yet;
You stand a better chance, lad,
The further along you get.
Keep your eye on the goal, lad,
Never despair or drop;
Be sure your path leads upward—
There's always room at the top.

Select Tale.
One of the Family.
Farmer Kimball was in his strawberry patch, pulling up the weeds, when Lucy Keene came down the road that beautiful morning, and he was just about to throw an armful of them over the fence as she came around the corner.
"The sun-bonnet she wore was exactly like one he remembered to have seen her mother wear twenty-five years ago; and he remembered, too, as he looked at this one, and the fresh, rosy face under it, how that one made his heart flutter the first time he saw it, and how he was so bowled by it, that he had under it, that he had walked home with Hector Mason, and had hard work to keep from proposing to her.
He wondered now, and he had wondered many times in the twenty-five years that had passed since then, why he had never did propose to her.
He had meant to marry her some time, and he was sure she liked him in the old days; but something had come between them, and she had married Robert Keene, and he had married his cousin Mary.
As he looked at Hector's daughter, this summer morning, the old fire stirred under the dust and ashes of twenty-five years, and he felt a little flame spring up in his heart.
"Good morning, Lucy," he said, leaning over the fence.
"Oh!" exclaimed Lucy, with a little jump, "I didn't see you, and you came near scaring me. Isn't it pleasant?"
"Yes, it is pleasant," answered the farmer, looking straight at her pretty face.
