Poetry. REMEMBERED.

Oh, shall I be remembered When this early life is o'er, When my feet have pressed the portal On that far off better shore ? When my weary hands are foldet Oa my cold and pulseless brea-t; When I drop life's weary burden— And the mortal is at rest?

Have I helped the poor and needy, And in good works borne a part? Have I spoken words of comfort. To some sad and aching heart? Have I caused one hour of gladuess To some creature Thou hast made? Oh how prope we are to wander In the veil of flesh arrayed,

Have I filled in life its mission-Fought for right and scorned the wrong, Has my life been one that tended To make others pure and strong? When the earthly bands are severed And the sands of life are run-Oh, shall I be remembered For some good that I have done?
