Poetry. KYRIELLE.

In Spring love came a welcome guest, And tarried long at my beheat; Now Autumn wanes, the skies are gray,

But loyal love flees not away. I charmed him with melodious lays Through long rose-scented Summerdays

My songs no more are clear or gay, But loyal love flees not away. We plucked and twined the myrtle flowers, Made joyance in the sylvan bowers; The blooms have died, wild winds hold sway, But loyal love flees not away.

Gene are the piping crickets, gone The feathered harbingers of dawn, And gone the woodland's bright display, But loyal love flees not away With intermingled light and shade The shifting seasons come and fade; Our fond hopes fail, false friends betray,
