Mr. Andrew Carnegie, a Scotchman by birth, now engaged in manufacturing in the United States, in a recent work makes the following rather surprising statements. He states that during last year 74,000 more tons of Bessemer steel were produced in the United States than in Great Britain; that more yards of carpet are made each year in Philadelphia and the vicinity than in all England, Wales and Scotland; that the school libraries alone in this country contain 12, 000,000 more books than all the public libraries of Europe combined; and that all the State and city debts of the Union added together, rating them according to valuation of property, do not amount to one fifth of the city debt of Manchester, England, or to one-tenth of the debt of Birmingham.
