One of the Surprised. To the Editors of the Carleton Sentinel: In looking over the minutes of proceedings of a railway meeting at Centreville, as published in your supplement to SENTINEL, I was somewhat surprised. First-that so important a matter as was discussed at that meeting should be so secretly kept from the public until after the meeting was held. Second -that, although all parties present disclaimed knowing who was the originator of the meeting, it apbears Mr. Scholey read a resolution, cut and dried for the occasion, declaiming in favor of the Southern route (so called) knowing, no doubt, that the favored ones who had been invited by the originator, whom he knew not, would carry it by vote, Mr. Scholey, as one of the speakers, advo-cated the Southern route as the one most desirable for the benefit of the farmers, and also for the company who built and operated the road and went so far as to say that, he had no doubt, if the road was built by the South ern route, in four or five years, so great would be the traffic on that branch line, there would have to be a double track laid. One would suppose a man of the intelligence of Mr. Scholey, knowing as he did there was a reporter present taking notes, would not make such a declaration; but such is human

Mr. Ketchum, M. P. P., was in favor of the Southern route because it would benefit the farmers along the route and in his constitu-Mr. West woke up to the fact that he could and must get a railroad through his Parish to secure the so much desired seat-County Councillor, Not one of the advocates of this route at empted to give any figures of the cost of building by this route, or the amount of traffic gained, while all admitted it was the traffic of Centreville, Boundary Line and Bridgewater that was sought after. Mr. J. D. Baird and you, Messrs. Editors, might be considered the moving spirits of this railway agitation. Mr. Baird has shown by figures what and where the traffic is coming from, and also that the only feasible route is a bridge at the mouth of Presque Isle across the river St. John, up the valley of the creek to Centreville and onward to Maine. Dr. Atkinson, at the meeting, took the common sense view with Mr. Baird, and showed the cost of building by Southern route to be $200,000 for 20 miles, while 60,- 000 would build the road up Presque Isle valley bridge included. Now, Messrs. Editors, I am acquainted with the country through which it is proposed to build by the Southern route, as well as by route through mud swamps and around curves innumerable and reach Lakeville, where ves innumerable and reach Lakeville, where are they and how are they to reach Centreville? I answer: follow the bog land to the two mile brook and down said brook to its mouth, where it emptys into Presque Isle; and where are we now, 18 miles from Upper Woodstock, through swamps and bogs, and enly two miles from Main Trunk Line, by way of Presque Isle stream and river St. John between. And I say there is no other way to reach Centreville by Southern route Customers can get suited in this establishment in everything in the line of Food and Clothing, and will find the prices satisfactory.

Way to reach Centreville by Southern route only down the valley of two mile brook to Presque Isle stream, and thence to Centreville. And now, I ask can we have the contraction of the contraction of the contraction of the contraction of the contraction. ville. And now, I ask, can we expect to get a subsidy from a depleted treasury on a road,

20 miles or more, when the same treffic can be reached by subsidizing $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles of road and the building of a bridge across the river. Or does it seem reasonable to suppose the New Brunswick Railway Co. would adopt the former and build and run a line 20 miles when their object could be reached by a line $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles and a bridge across the river. I think the odds is in favor of a short line. A word about the bridge: No better site could be found for a bridge; so divided are the waters of the river at the mouth of the Pres-

There has been an effort made by some interested parties to make it appear that the railway meeting at Centreville was a representative one. Why, sir, there was no notice whatever given of the meeting in this village. The Councillor for Wicklow had heard rumors of a meeting, but did not know when it was going to be; many, who might be supposed to take a great interest in the matter. N connection with my Collecting Business, I knew nothing whatever about it. Another have this day added an EXCHANGE and meeting should be held soon of which due
