Poetry.
SOMEHOW OR OTHER.
The good wife bustled about the house,
Her face still bright with a pleasant smile,
As her husband's happy song
Strengthened her heart and hand the while.
The good man sat in the chimney nook,
His little pipe within his hand,
And all he'd made and all he'd lost,
Ready and clear on his finger tip.
"Good wife, I've just been thinking a bit,
Nothing has done very well this year,
Everything is bound to be very dear;
How the cattle are going to be fed,
How we're going to keep the boys at school,
Is kind of a debt and credit sum,
Can't make balance by my rule."
She turned her round from her baking bread,
And she faced him with a cheerful laugh;
"Why, husband, what, one would think
That the good, rich wheat was only chaff,
And what it the wheat was only chaff,
As long as we both are well and strong?
I'm not a woman to worry a bit,
Somehow or other we get along."
"Into some lives some rain must fall,
Over all lands the storm must beat,
But when the rain and storm are over,
The after sunshine is twice as sweet.
Through every strait we have a road,
In every grief we find a song,
We've had to bear and had to wait,
But somehow or other we get along."
"For thirty years we have lived each other,
And was a failure Mrs. Dean, left
Six boys have called us father and mother,
And all of them living and doing well,
I owe no man a penny, my dear,
We're both of us loving, well and strong,
Good man, I wish you would smoke again,
I'm not a woman to worry a bit,
Somehow or other we get along."
He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh;
He kissed his wife with a tender smile,
He said: "I'll do as you tell me, love;
I'll count my work on the other side;
I'll let him have his better thought,
And I'll work with a slow, sweet song,
That should follow me many a year,
Somehow or other we get along."

THE FIFTY-DOLLAR BILL.
Mrs. Dean sat alone in her little kitchen. She never used her parlor. There was the extravagance of an extra fire to be considered—the fact that the best rag carpeted her floor, and that the best must not be worn out too recklessly, the dread possibility of sunshine fading out these economical. She believed in making everything last as long as it possibly could. And so she made the kitchen her head-quarters, and there, sitting, with her feet comfortably balanced on the stove hearth, the saucer of apples bubbling softly away at the back, and the sound of her husband's axe ringing from the back shed as he cut and split the kindling wood piled up there in well seasoned logs.
She was a little wrinkled-faced woman of fifty with stiff brown brows to her cap, hair that seemed dried up instead of silvered, and keen blue eyes that twinkled as if they had discovered the secret of perpetual motion. To save money was her chief aim and aim in life. The very mittens she was knitting were to be sold at the village store in exchange for tea, sugar, spices and all necessary groceries. "A penny saved is as good as a penny earned," was the motto she lived by.
"I'm glad I took that money out of the savings bank yesterday," said Mrs. Dean to herself, as the bright needles clicked. "People say it isn't quite safe. And one can't be too careful. But then again, there's danger of burglars—though to be sure, no burglar, she added, with a complacent inward chuckle, "would ever think of looking in the folds of the old Clarendon newspaper in the wall pocket on the wall. It's the bureau drawers, and the trunks, and the locked up chests that they aim for. A fifty dollar bill is a clean rip, new fifty dollar bill, and all savings, too, out of the house money."
Just then there sounded a knock at the door, and in came old Mr. Bridgman, rubicund with the touch of the March wind, and with a long pipe in his mouth, and animals which, from time to time, he himself had shot.
"Good day, Mrs. Dean, good day!" said he. "No, thank you; I can't sit down. I'm in a deal too busy for that. But I heard yesterday that you took fifty dollars out of the savings bank."
"Yes," said Mrs. Dean, her face voluntarily hardening. "I did."
"We are taking up a subscription to get little Lady Dick Bodley a cart and harness," said he. "The doctor says it's pretty hard for any one afflicted as she is to get along, and if you can help a little."
"But I can't," interposed Mrs. Dean. "I dare say," said he, "but I don't propose to cut it up into little bits."
"It's a deed of charity, Mrs. Dean," said the good man, to "help little Lady Dick Bodley."
"I dare say," said Mrs. Dean, a little irritably. "But I never pretended to be a charitable character."
The old doctor went away, and the next visitor was Helen Hurst, a rosy girl of eighteen.
"Excuse me interrupting you, Mrs. Dean," said she, "but Larry Johnson was at the bank yesterday, and he tells me you drew out your money!"
"Was all creation there?" thought Mrs. Dean.
"But she said nothing, only knit away until her needles seemed to glance and glitter like points of fire."
"I'm trying to get a boarding place at Mrs. Swipes," added Helen, coloring, "so as to be near the district school, where, as you know, I am to teach this spring. But Mrs. Swipes requires payment in advance by the month, and unfortunately we have used up all our slender means in providing my outfit. A teacher, you know, must be dressed decently to command the respect of her pupils. But if you would kindly lend me ten dollars—"
"I never lend," said Mrs. Dean, curtly. "I will be sure to pay it up when I receive my quarter's salary," pleaded Helen. "And I don't know of any one else to go to."
"It's altogether against my principles," said Mrs. Dean, with her face as hard as if it had been carved out of hickory.
Helen Hurst crept out, feeling humiliated and disappointed beyond all expression.
Mrs. Dean chuckled at her own shrewdness, and she hardly had time to stir up the apples in the saucepan, before Mrs. Graham entered with a leather-
