Poetry.

Remember, Boys Make men.

When you see a ragged urchin Standing wistful in the street, With torn bat and kneeless trousers. Dirty face and bare red feet. Pass not by the child unheeding ; Smile upon him. Mark me, when He's grown he'll not forget it-For remember, boys make men.

When the buoyant, youthful spirits Overflow in boyish treak, Chide your child in gentle accente; Do not in your anger speak. You must sow in youthful bosoms Seeds of tender merc es ; then Plants will grow and bear good fruitage, When the erring boys are men

Have you never seen a grandaire, With his eyes aglow with joy, Bring to mind some act of kindness-Something said to him a boy? Or relate some slight or coldness-With a brow all clouded, when He said they were too thoughtless To remember boys make men.

Let us try to add some pleasures To the life of every boy; For each child needs tender interest In its sorrows and its joy; Call your boys home by its brightness; They'll avoid a gloomy den, And seek for comfort elsewhere— For, remember, boys make men.

A portly old lady with a bird cage and several bandboxes next attracted my attention. A spinster who sat upright in a most rigid position, and an inspired miss of seventeen or thereabouts traveling in care of the conductor, together with a short, stout, thick-set man of uncertain age and occupation, made up the list of passengers. No, there was another: I had quite over looked him. He came on the train while we were in the smoker -a tall, dark man of about forty years, with a pale, haggard face and hollow. sunken eyes. His berth had been made up and he was seated on one side of it. his head resting on his hand, when Hal and I entered the car.
