THE GREAT CELEBRATION.

Philadelphia, Sept. 18, 1887.

The Great Constitutional Centennial Celebration is over, and although but of three days duration it is safe to say that the like was never seen in this country before. On Thursday 15th a great industrial demonstration took place in which there were 30,000 men and 100,000 horses in line. Starting at ten o'clock the procession moved slowly down Broad street, and such was its length that six o'clock had struck before the last—a train of cars, had passed. The parade, as its name denotes was a demonstration indicating the progress of the past one hundred years. Within one hour, and represent how various articles were made and worn in 1787, the one immediately following would show how these same things are done at the present time. The contrast between ocean travel as it was then and now, was shown by two large floats, one bearing a model of a full rigged ship, the other a beautiful model of a steamer of the period. Then came floats showing the progress made in railroad travel; the first engine made, a unique affair, was followed by a monster locomotive from the Baldwin Locomotive Works. This elegant piece of workmanship had on a full head of steam, and to all appearances was travelling at a rate of forty miles per hour. The agricultural display formed a prominent feature of the procession. The music for this monster parade was furnished by one hundred and 30,000 men in this country before. On Thursday evening at 8:30 President Cleveland and Cabinet arrived in a mile to avoid the throng of people waiting to catch a glimpse of him, he alighted about a mile from the main depot, the multitude however, bound not to be disappointed, congregated in front of the Hotel Lafayette, the President's stopping place, and patiently awaited his coming, which was at nine o'clock; his carriage surrounded by the city troops of dragons, was soon sighted, and then began a regular pandemonium, the crowd pressed so closely about his carriage in their eagerness to catch a glimpse of him and his wife that the dragons had literally to force a passage to the hotel entrance. On entering the hotel the President and wife turned and waved their hands to the crowd, which was turned to cheer for hours after he had disappeared.

On Friday the great military display took place, over 20,000 troops under the command of General Sheridan, paraded and were reviewed by the President. This was one of the most magnificent features of the celebration. General Sheridan met with a continued ovation along the line of march, but the great feature was the "boys in grey" led by the ex-rebel hero, General Gordon, now Governor of Georgia. Cheers upon cheers greeted this brave soldier and his brilliant staff, among whom was General Fitz Hugh Lee, son of General Lee. The marines, commanded by Admiral Fox, presented a fine appearance. After the parade the President was kept busy attending the various receptions and banquets tendered him. In the evening he attended a reception given by Cardinal Gibbons, with whom he conversed for some time; accompanying the President were Secretaries Bayard and Fairchild and a numerous staff of generals and governors. A prominent feature was the presence of governors of the thirteen original States.

On Saturday the last and most impressive ceremony of the celebration was held at Independence Square. Previous to the opening of the exercises the President gave a public reception at which about six thousand people received a Presidential shake of the hand, among them your humble servant. Some ludicrous events happened at this same reception at which about six thousand people received a Presidential shake of the hand, among them your humble servant. The President's hand, surprised the Chief Magistrate by suddenly kissing him, the kiss was intended for the lips but, in endeavoring to avoid the salute he received it on the chin, another desired him to kiss her baby; he declined. One man was so excited that he forgot to remove his hat, while on an old darkey, offered his left hand, and on drawing it his mistake, blurted out "dar, de ole woman said I'd make a fool of myself, an' I just done gone an' did it." After the reception the President was driven to Independence Square where he was received with tremendous applause. Accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland, he advanced to the edge of the platform, and calmly surveyed the dense throng beneath him; after thus satisfying the curiosity of the multitude he returned to his seat and the ceremonies began. The exercises opened by the singing of the new Hail Columbia, the verses of which were composed by Oliver Wendell Holmes; this was splendidly rendered by 2,000 school children, accompanied by the Marine Band of Washington. The patriotic hymn, "Beulah Land" of New York, followed, asking the Divine blessing on the proceedings. After an introductory address by Hon. John A. Keson, the President arose and prolonged a reception given by the President attended several receptions, winding up at the Academy of Music, where a grand banquet, tendered by the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania and various other learned institutions awaited his presence. This was the grand finale of the three days proceedings, the like of which, Philadelphia has never seen. It was the Centennial of 1876 crowded into three days. Everything on the programme was carried out to the minutest detail. It is estimated that fully 500,000 people witnessed the military parade on Friday, and yet within there was no serious accidents. The weather was all that could be desired, in short everything conspired to make this one of the most memorable pages in the history of the Republic.

THE GRAY TRESHER.

Manufactured by M. MOODY & SONS, has been in use in this County for a number of years, and is generally admitted to possess more points of excellence than any other machine in the market. I append a testimonial from one of our leading farmers which is a tribute of the many in my hands.

George F. Clark, Woodstock, N. B.: Dear Sir—In reply to your enquiry as to how I like the Gray Tresher which I purchased from you last fall, I can say that I am much pleased with it. My brother and I bought the first Little Giant which ever came into this province. It was made for a sample machine and was the best one I ever saw. We ran it five seasons, and I have therefore a right to know something about a tresher. I find I can get as much power from the Gray as I could from the Giant with four inches more elevation, and consequently the labor of the team is much less with the Gray than the Giant. The separator being wider, gives more room to separate the grain from the straw, and I can thresh sixty bushels per hour without waiting any more grain than the Giant would to when threshing forty bushels in the same time. The machine is in all appearances strong and well made and I like it very much.

Yours truly,

BROCK VAIL, Jacksonville, Carleton Co., N. B.

I expect a shipment of the same machines in a few days which will be sold on favorable terms at my warehouse, Main St., Woodstock, or by my various agents throughout the country.
