A Lonely Bachelor.
Oh, you, who're blessed with means and wife—
All social joys possessing—
Be grateful for your happy life,
And thank God for the blessing.
In solitude, I lonely pine;
Oh, dreary is my life!
That boon divine has we're been mine,
A loving, faithful wife.
Where shall I find a wisecracking mate,
One gentle, kind and true?
Sad were my fate, if now too late
I should forever rue.
My lonely, cheerless, single life—
Alone, unloved, uncared,
Through all my life without a wife,
My lonely path to tread.
A joyous life indeed is mine,
In such a lonely state,
They well divine that I repine,
And long to meet my mate.
I know not where she may reside,
The girl I lost will be mine,
But somewhere in the world, so wide,
She is I well opine.
Kind Heaven surely guard her,
Wherever she may be,
From every danger ward her,
And guide her unto me.
I have a heart with fondness fire,
For warmest love intended,
And still my wife I cheer my life,
And loveliness, still is ended?
Oh, no! indeed it must not be,
I shall not wait in vain,
O'er land or sea I'll come to me
Forever to remain.
Queen of my rural home to be!
We'll live for one another,
I kindly share each joy or care
And truly love each other.
Oh, tarry not my dearest love,
But hasten unto me,
For I long with you to be strong
My darling one to see.
My life's sun's reached meridian
Too soon it may decline,
And still my wife I cheer my life,
Has ever yet been mine.
Then hasten! Oh, haste! my little love
Oh, hasten unto me!
Match longer, now, for thee.
Hemlock Grange, 6th Sept., 1887.

A TRYST TO KEEP.
As the sun sinks down at close of day
To the fields I thoughtfully stray,
I think of the future and the past,
And the many things that have passed.
As one unthoughtful, a tryst to keep,
I think of the future and the past,
And the many things that have passed.
The pale moon shines from under a cloud,
Lending to earth a shadowy shroud,
And tipping the trees to the top, the hill tops,
With silver gleams and the great tops,
Dressed with olive green to the top,
My footsteps to the fair one's grave.
Yet, though beside her, silent I sit,
I see no more, oh, thought most dead!
She whom I loved—still love—a dead!
Night after night companion,
To sit alone at my darling's grave.

Select Tale.
HOW IT TURNED OUT.
"I'll teach her," said Tom—"I'll show her that I ain't the sort of a fellow to be made an auntie interfering with my affairs!"
"But, Tom," said his sister Cecy, soberly, "Aunt Aimee was in the right. It wasn't fair of you to be copying out the answers to the algebra sums from Louisa Elton's book."
"Who asked your opinion, Miss?" retorted Tom. "I suppose a fellow can have his own thoughts, eh? And I'll be even with Aunt Aimee yet; see if I don't—bawled, Aunt Aimee herself, severely unconscious of the tempest of wrath she had evoked, was arranging flowers for the dinner table, singing softly to herself, as she sorted out the clusters of purple bell-peppers, the sprigs of scarlet geranium leaves, the half-opened Marcella Neil rose-buds, and the white candelabra, into their various vases. She had but recently come into the control of her widowed brother's household, and her new position was a new one to her. In which she had found a grief to her gentle soul. Nell's carelessness as to dress and regular habits, Cecy's utter disregard of rule and command Tom's habit of 'erring' in his lessons, and little girls' dreadful untidiness in regard to their hair and finger-nails—poor Aimee feared that she never should be able entirely to eradicate these ingrained predilections. But she had resolved to try her best; and it was in the following up of this result that she had had an unwelcome view of Master Tom's deepest hostility.

OLD HABITATIONS IN AMERICA.
Major Powell, Chief of the Geological Survey, who has been about a month in the field, has discovered in New Mexico, near California Mountain, what he proclaims to be the oldest human habitations upon the American continent. The mountains in this vicinity are covered with huge beds of lava, in which the prehistoric man and his comrades excavated square rooms and were lined with a species of plaster made from the lava, and in these rooms were found various evidences of quite an advanced civilization, among them a species of cloth made of woven hair, and a large number of pieces of pottery. In the sides of the rock, cupboards and shelves were excavated.
