TO A LILY.

Upon a lake,
Within a wood,
A lily grew;
And for its sake
I thought I would Go miles a few—

Within a dell,
Not far away,
A girl I know:
It's Lily Bell;
And she, they say,
Has yet no beau—

And if I can
For flowers go
Some miles away,
Can't I, a man
Without a beau,
See Lil. to-day?

Select Tale.

A HAPPY CHANCE.

BY ALLAN MORPETH.

Leonard Goring was a busy man, for though comparatively young, in his hands rested almost the entire charge of the business of an old established firm of solicitors in Lincoln's Inn. An important matter of business, too delicate to be entrusted to a clerk, took him to Liverpool, where he arrived early one foggy November morning, so early indeed, that being in want of a shave before it was likely that the more fashionable hairdressers had opened for the day, he turned into a small barber's shop in a quiet street of poor-looking houses, and submitted his chin to the hands of its proprietor.

It was a happy chance—Mr. Goring has often since that murky morning declared—that led his steps towards that humble shop, for just as he was on the point of leaving, a low sweet voice sounded close behind him, saying:

'Please, Mr. Wilson?'

'Hullo, Jessie,' said the barber, 'what's the matter? Mother worse?'

'Mr. Wilson,' and the sweet voice was pitiful and strained, 'you said my curls were worth a lot of money the other day.'

'So I did,' said the barber, eagerly.

'Will you give some for them? Our coal is all gone, and there is nothing to eat, and mamma——'

Here Jessie broke into passionate sobs. Mr. Goring stooped forward a little, and lifted Jessie to his lap.

'Let me see your curls,' he said, gently lifting a shabby hat, and letting fall a shower of hair of the purest golden color. 'Suppose you sell it to me,' he said quietly; 'but you must promise me that nobody shall cut it off but myself.' And I must know your name, and where you live, so I can come for it.'

Jessie, whose sobs had been stilled at the sight of the money, answered:

'Oh, thank you! Nobody else shall touch my curls. My name is Jessie Herrick, and I live on the top floor of this house.'

'And how old are you Jessie?'

'Ten years old last July. Please, may I go now? It is so cold in our room and mamma is so ill' the lips quivering.

'You run back to mamma, and I will send the coal,' said Mr. Goring, muttering, as the child went away: 'If it should be! It would be a direct Providence!' Aloud, he said to the barber: 'Who is she?'

'The child of a widow dying upstairs. After her husband died she worked for me; but she was not strong, and things have been going badly for the last few months.'

'Has she had a doctor?'

'Yes, the dispensary doctor.'

Mr. Goring, having given an order at the nearest grocery for food and fuel, returned to the house, and mounted to the fourth floor.

A door, standing wide open, showed him the interior of a poorly furnished room, and Jessie standing near a bed, listening to a gentleman speaking in a low tone to her.

'Pardon me,' Mr. Goring said 'the doctor?'

'Yes; Dr. Musgrave.'

'I am a friend of Mrs. Herrick's I have just heard of her illness. Can you send a competent nurse? I am Leonard Goring, and Mrs. Herrick's lawyer. I will be responsible.'

To Jessie a few hours later, it seemed as if she was living a fairy tale.

First, there appeared a stout elderly woman, all motherly kindness, who lifted her mother out of the hot tossed bed, made it comfortable and clean, set the room in order, made such an extravagant fire as Jessie had never seen, and then began to cook delicious things taken out of a great hamper sent into the room.

All the luxuries the poor child had longed vainly to give her mother appeared as if by magic, and her own hunger was satisfied as it had not been for weeks.

Day after day, for the business on which he had visited Liverpool detained him for many weeks, Leonard Goring climbed the stairs to Mrs. Herrick's room, to hear from the nurse how the poor little widow was getting on.

She was able, after awhile, to sit up, and looked like a fair, pretty child in her big chair. Fruit, flowers, books, all were sent to make the hours of convalescence less tedious, and when at last he departed, he tried to face the fact that an episode of his life was nearly over, that it would cost him bitter pain to resign,

'Who would have imagined,' he asked himself, scornfully, 'that I, who never cared for a woman in my life, would walk into a back attic and fall in love with a widow? I can't ask her to marry me, that is clear. She would think I had mercenary objects in view all the time. I think I will write. I will; I'd better not trust myself to see her again, and Briggs knows all about the case.'

Little Mrs. Merrick, in a soft, white wrapper and shawl, was sitting in her big chair, with Jessie nestling on a low seat beside her, talking of Mr. Goring.

Mrs. Maguire, bustling about the room, smiled meaningly as the sentences reached her ears, but she was a discreet woman and held her tongue.

'Though,' she thought, 'if ever two people were over head and ears in love, them's the two. Young folks never had it worse.'

'When he comes to-day,' Mrs. Herrick was saying, when a rap at the door interrupted her.

A gentleman was ushered in, who introduced himself,—

Twice Mrs. Herrick read the letter.

'Do I understand?' she said faintly. 'My father died four years ago, and forgave me, leaving me his entire fortune?'

'Exactly. You see, the child's name gave Mr. Goring the clue, and he has been working while you were ill, so that everything is arranged for you. You can take possession of our old home whenever you will.'

'Mr. Goring knew, then, when he came here?'

'Yes. By the way, you were advertised for over and over again.'

A brief conversation made everything clear, and Mr. Briggs went away.

But Mrs. Herrick, who had been very calm through the whole interview, lay back, white and trembling, in her chair one thought only in her heart.

'He has gone away! He is afraid I will suspect him of mercenary motives, and he has left me! He loves me! I know he loves me, but he will never come back to me!'

Busy days followed, and the widow took possession of her property.

But she did not get strong, though she had all things to make her so that money could procure.

What her heart hungered for was the presence of Leonard Goring. It seemed bold, unwomanly to send for him.

And yet the happiness of two lives was at stake.

She decided at last. If he despised her, the separation could be no more complete.

So, one morning, Leonard Goring found upon his breakfast table a little note, upon paper stamped with the name of a fashionable hotel. And inside he read,—

'DEAREST MR. GORING,—Mamma says if you would like to cut off the curls you bought last winter, you will find us at this hotel.

'JESSIE HERRICK.'

Face to face once more, pride was thrown to the winds and love triumphed. Leonard Goring had no farther fear of being misunderstood when Mrs. Herrick's eyes answered his loving words before her lips spoke

And she never doubted that it was love, and love only, that brought her lover back to her.

And Jessie keeps her curls, although her step-father declares they are his, and threatens to cut them off when she is married and leaves him, a threat that may daunt little Jessie's lovers in the future, but assuredly does not frighten anybody now.

A WONDERFUL LAKE.

The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa, and perhaps any other State, is what is called 'The Walled Lake,' situated in Wright county, twelve miles north of the Dubuque and Pacific Railway and one hundred and fifty miles west of Dubuque City. The lake is from two to three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen wide at the bottom, and five wide on the top. Another fact is the size of the stones used in its construction, the whole of them varying in weight from three tons down to a hundred pounds. There is an abundance of stones in Wright county; but surrounding the lake, to the extent of five or ten miles, there are none. No one can form an idea as to the means employed to bring them to the spot, or who constructed the wall. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in width, composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie.

It is said that the origin of the complimentary phrase, 'He is a brick,' is to be found in the answer of an Eastern prince to the question, 'Where are the fortifications of your city?' 'Every man,' said he, 'is a brick.' Yet see, remarks Tidbits, how a metaphor may undervalue a man, for scarcely one of those soldiers could have been under eight or nine stone.

If you want knowledge, you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it; and if pleasure you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work his life is a happy one.

In the House of Commons, fishing matters being under discussion, Mr. Temple, M. P., for York County, said:—

As this question has been brought up, there is one matter to which I would like to call the attention of the Minister. In the western part of my county, which adjoins the State of Maine, there are a number of large lakes, in which are a great many fish. I think there are some 40 or 50 miles of lakes, through the middle of which the boundary line between the Province of New Brunswick and the State of Maine runs. On the American side they protect their fish by having wardens to look after it, but on our side there is no protection whatever, there is no one to look after it, and the people do just as they like. I bring this to the notice of the Minister, in the hope that it will be attended to in the future, and that someone will be appointed to look after our fisheries on those large lakes.

Gently scattered here and there,
Will do very much to save them
From the evil tempter's snare.

Do not say you're not adapted,
Or you have not got the time;
Is the evil one not sowing
Seeds of death, disease and crime?

There is surely half a dozen
Of the children where you live,
Who would gladly sit and listen
To the warning you could give.

Let us labor for the children,
Labor lovingly and well;
For the good they may accomplish
In the future, who can tell?

—Selected.

Evidences arise every day which convince me more and more that the use of tobacco, especially by the younger portion of the community, is destroying the physical stamina of the country, stripping youth of its bloom and beauty, and manhood of its virility, with a reflex influence on morals which is truly deplorable.—Rev. Francis Colse, D. D.

Stop all moderate drinking, and in five years there will be no drunkards, and the 250,000 liquor saloons in the United States will be closed up. All who uphold moderate drinking uphold making drunkards, and Christians should clear themselves of this great sin.—Ex.

A firm faith is the best theology; a good life the best philosophy; a clear conscience the best law; honesty the best policy; temperance the best physic.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Godey's Lady's Book speaks for itself and needs no praise. The March number, now before us, is a fair indication of the value of this publication the year round. It is sparkling, spicy, sensible, and sure to please all ladies who want a magazine for home improvement, fashion, intelligence, and general culture. Subscription price, $2.00 per year. Address Godey's Lady's Book, 1226 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Scribner's Magazine for March contains articles on a great variety of subjects, from the practical questions of the Railway Mail Service to the subtilities of Economy in Mental Work, with an abundance of good fiction and papers on topics of contemporary interest—several of them richly illustrated in a manner sustaining the reputation made by this Magazine for strong and original work. Thomas L. James, Postmaster-General in Garfield's cabinet, and now President of the Lincoln National Bank, New York, writes of the "Railway Mail Service" with sympathy and appreciation of the faithful work done, and from the full knowledge given him by his long practical experience in positions of authority. "The Master of Ballantrae, Robert Louis Stevenson's exciting romance of adventure, has now reached an important crisis in the development of the plot. The Red Paper, which is a feature of the Magazine, is this month contributed by Henry James, who writes "An Animated Conversation" (in dialogue form) between several Englishmen and Americans who casually meet in a London hotel. William F. Apthorp, the musical critic, describes some of the most important of "Wagner's Heroes and Heroines," interpreting their characters with a great deal of sympathy. Thomas A. Janvier, an acknowledged authority on Mexico, contributes a bundle of curious superstitions and folk-tales which he has collected from odd characters. The poets of the number are Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Graham R. Tomson, and Zoe Dana Underhill.

His "Comments on Canada," in Harper's Magazine for March, show Charles Dudley Warner the genial, accurate, and sympathetic observer. His conclusions in regard to political issues in the Dominion will command attention because they carry with them internal evidence that they have been logically drawn. Bjornstjerne Bjornson in the same Number continues his studies of "Norway and its People." His pictures of peasant life are often the very poetry of characterization. The capital of another foreign people, "New Ireland," gives the subject for a long series of illustrations and brief explanatory text by Curt von Zelau. Besides the third instalment of Constance Fenimore Woolson's serial, "Jupiter Lights," this Number contains three short stories: "Slowtopp's Confession," by John Little, illustrated by Frederick Barnard, "A New Arabian Night," by Elward Everett Hale, and "One story is Good till Another is Told," a tale on the co-operative plan, by Brander Matthews and George H. Jessop. "Poe's Mary" might almost be classed with the fiction; it is the true story of the poet's early love, an episode unknown to his past biographers. "The Origin of Celestial Species" is by the Darwin of astronomy, Prof J. Norman Lockyer, F. R. S. It will come as a revelation to those who have not followed of late the advances made in this science. The publication of Motley's "Letters" is the justification for a characteristic short essay by George William Curtis. Theodore Child writes upon "The Institute of France," and Alexis Lemaistre complements the article with many illustrations in the French manner. Kenyon Cox contributes an essay in artistic criticism, "William M. Chase, Painter," with examples of the artist's works. Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Louise Imogen Guiney are the poets of the Number. The Departments discuss American topics almost exclusively.

In the March Century the most timely essay is that on the "Rules of the House of Representatives," by the Republican leader, Hon. Thomas B. Reed of Maine. Mr. Reed explains how the rules of the House have been framed with the view of rendering legislation difficult, and he makes important suggestions of changes which it is natural to suppose he and his political associates who will control the next House of Representatives, may endeavour to bring about. Another timely essay is Dr. Edward Eggleston's review of James Bryce's already famous work on "The American Commonwealth," under the title of "A Full-Length Portrait of the United States." The present instalment of the Life of Lincoln is entitled "The Edict of Freedom," and completes the story of Emancipation. The frontispiece of the number is a portrait of the Grand Lama of the Trans-Baikal, from a photograph given to George Kennan in exchange for his own, in action there is begun a three part story by Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote, entitled "The Last Assembly Ball: A Pseudo Romance of the Far West." Mr. Edwards, the author of "Two Runaways," in "The Rival Souls" tells a story in a new vein, and without dialect; and Mr. Jessop, in "The Correspondence of Mr. Miles Grogan," gives a study of the progress of a New York politician from a liquor saloon to a residence in Montreal. "The History of Alix de Morainville" is another "Strange True Story," edited by Mr. Cable. There are poems by James Whitcomb Riley ("Down to the Capital"), Frank Dempster Sherman, Florence Earle Coates, L. M. S., Herbert D. Ward, Charles Henry Luders; and in "Bric-a-Brac" by Tudor Jenks. "Topics of the Time" are "Election Laws for Congressmen," "The English Language in America," and "Lincoln's Disinterestedness." Marion J. Verdery, in "Open Letters," writes of the South under the Harrison Administration, from a Southern point of view.

On Canada.

Charles Dudley Warner has in Harpers for March, a well considered and honestly expressed paper on Canada which is quite conspicuous in its compilation of fact. In it he says:—

If one would forecast the future of Canada, he needs to take a wider view than personal preferences or the agitations of local parties. The railway development, the Canadian Pacific alone, has changed within five years the prospects of the political situation. It has brought together the widely separated Provinces, and has given a new impulse to the sentiment of nationality. It has produced a sort of unity which no act of Parliament could ever create. But it has done more than this; it has changed the relation of England to Canada. The Dominion is felt to be a much more important part of the British empire than it was 10 years ago, and in England within less than 10 years there has been a revolution in colonial policy. With a line of fast steamers from the British islands to Halifax, with lines of fast steamers from Vancouver to Yokohama, Hong-Kong and Australia, with an all-rail transit within British limits, through an empire of magnificent capacities, offering homes for any possible British overflow, will England regard Canada as a weakness? It is true that on this continent the day of dynasties is over, and that the people will determine their own place. But there are great commercial forces at work that cannot be ignored, which seem strong enough to keep Canada for a long time on her present line of development in a British connection.

It is said that the Empress Frederick has collected 24,000 obituary notices of her husband.
