(For The Carleton Sentinel.)

To our Country's Traducer. New Brunswick is my native land, So fair in my opinion, And may God bless what we possess, Our Province and Dominion. No patriot can calmly hear His native land berated, He'll give them back so sound a whack They'll need to be hard-pated.

"The patriot's mind you do admire,"—
Then try a piece of mine, sir; more you ask, I'll try the task,-It freely shall be thine, sir; and though you think me "bigoted" To differ now from you, sir,-Judge fellow-men twixt me and Benn-We'll see who's reckoned true, sir. You're in the list before me now, Just vengeance you shall feel, sir;

Shalt taste the pointed steel, eir. The pen is mightier than the sword," And much far further reaching; So foes arognt! beware its point! I'll pin you for false preaching. Now shall I try my weapon with My country's vain traducer; pen hath might a wrong to right, I'll try a pass at you, sir. Tou publish to the world around, ike knight of old, thou, patriot bold,

Nor blush to sign your name, sir,— Mis-statements you well know untrue— Your country to defame, sir;ou're "a Canadian true and bold," For such yourself you style, sir, hough false 'tis quite like what you write, And makes us only smile, sir.

We know that you cannow elieve
The half of what you 31e te, sir,
Nor think you wise, the sir,
To meet a stranger's me at, sir. There may be better climes than ours, To doubt it none may need, sir, But if there are not worse by far, The world is fair indeed, sir. Our people reach as ripe an age
As elsewhere may be found, sir,
For "Yellow Jack," and such we lack,

Who ne er come stalking round, sir. We know that there are Sunny climes That lead our youth away, sir; And many roam afar from home, Who oft come back to stay, sir. But when you say that Norway bleak Enjoys a milder air, sir, ou know you prate, and derogate New Brunswick free and fair, sir. 'Tis true we sudden changes have From warmth to cold again, sir; Babes stand the change, so it is strange It so effects brave men, sir;-

The bold and true Canadian Who cringes at the cold, air; or Boreas' breath to him is "death And fearful woes untold," sir. Now I'll assert what well I know Canadians will endorse, sir: — We do not find the northern wind So fearful in its force, sir. For some time now soft Auster has Too far prolonged a stay, sir— To Aeolus our plaint is thus— "Send Boreas to-day, sir."

Send Boreas or we ruined are, We need him here again, sir; Send Boreas, and pity us, Nor punish all for Benn, sir; 'Twas he who did calumniate His country, and thy name, sir Let him alone for this atone, For he deserves the blame, sir. lext time you, Boreas, come along With furious rush, on pinions strong, Bear Benn away to Norway's coast,

Or else to somewhere where he'll roast, And let us see not e'en his ghost In Canada again. March 8th, 1889.
