Hoetry. The Enquiry.

BY CHARLES MACKAY. Tell me, ye winged winds That round my pathway scar, Do you not know some spot Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,—
Some Valley in the west, Where free from toil and pain, The weary soul may rest ? The loud wind dwindled to a whisper low, And sighed for pity as it answered, "No!"

Tell me, thou mighty deep, Wnose billows round me play. Knowest thou some favored spot,— Some Island far away. Where weary man may find The bliss for which he sighe, Where sorrow never lives. And friendship never dies? the loud waves rolling in perpetual flow, stopped a while, and sighed to answer, "No!

And thou, serenest moon, That with such lovely face, Dost look upon the earth Asleep in night's embrace,— Tell me, in all thy round Hast thou not seen some spot Where miserable man Might find a happier lot?

And a voice, sw.et, but sad, responded, "No! Tell me, my secret sou!,
Oh! tell me, Hope and Faith,— Is there no resting place From sorrow, sin, and death? Where mortals may be blest,-Where grief may find a balm,

And weariness a rest? sith, Hope and Love, best boons aved their bright wings, and answered, "Yes

The safety of a mountain climber depends upon being well shod; therefore, the Swi guides wear heavy shoes with sharp spikes in the soles. On a brightfJulylmorning, a fa-mous man of science started with two gentlemen to ascend Piz Morteratsch, a steep and lofty snow mountain in Switzerland. Though experienced mountaineers, they took with them Senni, the boldest guide in the district. After reaching the summit of Morteratech, they started back, and soon arrived at a steep slope covered with a thin snow. They were lashed together with a strong rope, which was tied to each man's waist.

"Keep carefully in my steps, gentlemen," said Senni, "for a false step here might start the snow and send us down in an avalanche.' He had hardly spoken when the whole field of ice began to slide down the icy mountain side, carrying the unlucky climbers with it at a terrible pace. A steeper slope was be-fore them, and at the end of it was a precipice. The three foremost men were almost According to a report made to the business buried in the whirling snow. Golden Specific.

It can be given in a cup of coffee or tea without the knowledge of the person taking it; is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker of an alcoholic wreck. It has been given in thousands of cases, and in every instance a perfect cure has followed. It never fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific, it becomes an atter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist.
