Canon Farrar has lifted up his voice in favor of the temperance societies, which, he says, are despised by some high toned people. His eloquent defence of temperance orders reminds us of the famous words of the philanthropist nobleman, Lord Shaftesbury, who says: "Had it not been for the work of temperance societies (which it the fashion of selfish doctrinaires to sneer at and despise) we should long ago have been merged in such a deluge of intemperance and crime as would have swept away our whole civilization."
