CURE FITS!

When I was a child I did not mean merely to stop them for a time, and then have them return again. I mean I WANTED A RADICAL CURE. I have made the discovery of

The speaker was an engineer on one of the railroad lines leading from a large city, and he had just been examining a bridge under which the water had risen to such a height during the recent freshet, that he questioned its ability to stand the strain of so long and heavy a train as that to which his engine was attached. He had refused to take it across before testing the bridge alone with the engine. It did not in the least lose his thought, as he went on his rounds.

Just as he was preparing to start, he felt a touch on his arm, and looking round he saw a tall, rather awkward figure whom he recognized as an engineer who had been on the road, but had been dismissed the year before on account of his habits. A better engineer than Sam Colter when sober could not be found, but unfortunately for him, he had allowed the demon drink to get the better of him and was fast losing not only the confidence of others, but his own self respect.

"Come down, John," he said in a low tone. "Your wife needs you; no one needs me. I'll take the risk."
"Sam!" exclaimed his companion in some surprise.
"There, there; no use arguing. I've made up my mind. I'm sober and you know what that means. You need not fear to trust me."

"I'm not afraid of that, but I can't let you do it, Sam. My duty is, and I shall do it. There's a wife thinking of and perhaps praying for you. To tell the truth, it looks to me like a shaky business, but no man shall call John Lawrence a coward."

"You are as brave a man as ever lived, John, but there are those at home you must not leave. There's a wife thinking of and perhaps praying for you. To tell the truth, it looks to me like a shaky business, but no man shall call John Lawrence a coward."

Poetry.

The Farmer Feeds His All.

My lord rides through his palace gate,
My lady sweeps along in state,
The sage thinks long on many a thing,
And the maiden muses on marriage;
The ministered haphazard merrily,
The sailor plies the foaming sea,
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier without a fear.
But fall to each what'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Smith hammered cheerily the sword,
Priest preached pure and holy word,
Dance Alton worked his broiler's trade,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell,
The tap wife sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fishes in the mere,
And courtesans raffle, strut and shine,
While pages bring the Gascogne wine,
But fall to each what'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man builds his castle fair and high,
Whatever river runneth by,
Great cities rise in every land,
Great temples show the builder's hand,
Great armies move and towers,
Great palaces and pleasant bowers,
Great work is done, let's here and there,
And well we work it everywhere,
But work or rest, what'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man builds his castle fair and high,
Whatever river runneth by,
Great cities rise in every land,
Great temples show the builder's hand,
Great armies move and towers,

A couple of young men living at Wellsville, Mo., were rivals for the hand of one of the fair Wellsville daughters. They were inclined to settle the matter by duel. When the learned of the affair got wind of their intention they met her at the hour set for the fight, and after reminding them that duels were unlawful and the victor would be a fugitive from justice the rest of his days, they suggested that they run a foot race, hand to hand to the finish. The young men accepted her proposition, and the couple the race and walked off the field with the victor.
