Poetry.

A Visit from Iris.

'Twas in June, when fair Nature in beauty is seen,
Free of all with sweet flowers, and vestments of green,
When the trees and the shrubs, that so long had been bare,
Now in full leaf and blossom, made fragrant the air.

In the depths of the wild wood, with nobody near,
All alone, I was living, with nothing to fear.
Here with birds, happy mated, the forest world
With flowers and contentment, they'd joyously sing.

As of love and contentment, they'd joyously sing,
A dear love of nature, I thought 't would be best,
Like the birds in the wild wood, to build me my nest.

Very small was my clearing, but only began,
And but few were my acres exposed to the sun,
What the forest primeval—how long, who shall say?

Had I known the bright sunshine, and I deep shadow lay,
How the land, for his labors, might harvest
Off apart from my clearing, some space in the wood,
Where the hemlock tree-bark tree, in great numbers stood,

I'd been working, the giants to strip of their bark,
When the sky, lately bright, became clouded and dark;
Soon a shower, most welcome, refreshing and sweet,
Such as farmers, with joyful hearts, thankfully greet.

But as bark-peelers need not, and care not to see,
Stopped my work for a time, and I thought it might be
Just as well, to start homeward, alone there to dine,
Though the prospect appeared, 't would again fall fair.

So then homeward I hastened, while raindrops fell fast,
On the trees and the bushes, along as I passed.
I soon reached my small clearing, when—what a surprise!
What a lovely friend picture delighted my eyes!

For when suddenly out from the wood I emerged,
By the shower fast falling on speedily urged,
And before I quite thought of me as I looked up,
The bright sunshine out burst on a picture most true.

For a certain-like cloud was just then drawn aside,
And the day king looked forth in his splendour and pride.

A splendid rainbow, so perfect and bright,
Spanned my orchard, and clearing, from left to the right.
For it sprang from the woods on each side and between,
Thus I reached my small clearing, when—what a scene!

O'er my clearing stood gazing in deep wonderment,
At the sight of my home in the woods far away,
Where my labor so lately lot in the bright day,
The green bank, sloping westward, with sunbeams bright.

And shadows in places made contrast with light.
Here the rustic cabin 'mongst apple trees stood,
And was built of spruce logs from the ambient wood.

A young orchard of apples around it was seen,
Full of pink and white blossoms, 'mongst leaves of bright green.

The gay humming-birds darted at blossoms
And the bees, 'mongst the blossoms, the sweet nectar found.

The green clover was sparkling with drops of the rain,
Which it welcomed, as did, too, the fast growing grain;

A few drops, like glad tears, from the trees would fall,
And the pleasant face of Nature seemed smiling through all.

On the grass, fair Nature, man's work may be seen,
But he never could equal such painting as this;
Though in colors celestial his work he could do,
Still no mortal need hope for to out-rival you;

For though great be his skill, and his work passing fair,
On the canvas man painteth, thou paintest the air!

So I stood gazing at the scene, and I thought to myself,
That the painter of Nature seemed smiling through all.

For it seemed to me, as I gazed, that I saw
The face of my home, and I thought to myself,
That the painter of Nature seemed smiling through all.

For it seemed to me, as I gazed, that I saw
The face of my home, and I thought to myself,
That the painter of Nature seemed smiling through all.

For it seemed to me, as I gazed, that I saw
The face of my home, and I thought to myself,
That the painter of Nature seemed smiling through all.

Local & Foreign Items.

An elephant said to be 30 years old recently died in Texas, advertised as a barbecue, "with better liquor than is usually furnished." When the people assembled, a desperado in the crowd cried out, "Mr. Paul Danton, your reverence has lied. You promised us not only a good barbecue, but better liquor. Where's the liquor?" "There!" answered the missionary, in tones of thunder, and pointing his long, bony finger at the man who had uttered the words, "There!" he repeated with a look of terrible warning, while his enemy actually trembled at his feet; "there is the liquor which God the Eternal bequeathed for all his children. Not in the shimmering still, over which the sun is poured
