Poetry.

Lines Written on the Death of E. T. Boyer.

We miss to-night the lovely boy Who once made glad our home, And think, with bitter grief, of all The lonely days to come.

Our thoughts turn back to days of yore, When he was but a child, And lisped to us his evening prayer, In simple accents mild.

How fondly then we gazed on him, And thought, with a mother's joy, That God was very good to give To us this precious boy.

We look o'er the twenty years or more That he was spared to us, And many things in colors bright His loving deeds to us.

But think not this, lone heart, in this Thy darkest, dreariest day; For back! from out the realm of bliss, I hear the angels say:

He now is led in pastures green, By living waters pure, And in the twinkling of the eye, That ever shall endure.

He walks in raiment pure and white, For he is worthy now; And in the twinkling of the eye, That ever shall endure.

No chilly blast of earthy wind, Shall ever pierce the soul, No sorrow shall befall, and no joy While endless ages roll.

Look up, dear heart, and do not grieve— On Christ thy burden cast, For he can calm the heaving sea, And still thy raging blast.

Thine earthly race with patience run, Thy cross with meekness bear, And, when the triumphs all are won, The Victor's crown will wear. —A Friend.

W. C. U. Corner.

Regular meeting of the Woodstock W. C. U., every Thursday, at 8 o'clock, in the Advent Hall. Every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock.

The Band of Hope meets in Temperance Hall, every Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Never shall my hand or voice be lifted against so-called temperance fanaticism. If ever a cause justified fanaticism, the temperance cause is it. You have made nothing more disgusting, or more disheartening to the cause of humanity, than the selfish, ease-loving, luxurious man indulging in dissipation and demagogic temperance fanaticism. Rev. Phillips Brooks.

There is one dreadful evil ever spreading the whole land which makes havoc of our workingmen—the evil of intemperance. Unless you make distinct and positive efforts against it you will be neglecting an evil which is eating out the very heart of society, destroying domestic life among our working classes, and perhaps doing greater injury than any other cause that could be named in this age.—Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

How Much Did He Make? "I have made one thousand dollars the last three months," said a prosperous liquor-seller, to a group of men standing near his saloon. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" was the quick response. "You have made wretched homes, women and children poor, sick, and weary of life. You have made many one drunkards; you made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made my mother a broken-hearted woman. Oh, you have made much more than I can reckon, but you'll get the full account some day."—Sel.

The Assessment Too High. Brother, some people think if you start out to be religious you have to give up everything, and you can't make any money—you can't do anything; you just have to give up the whole business up. I was talking to a fellow some time ago, and he said, "Jones, the fellow is putting my assessment a little too high."

"I said 'How much do you pay?' He said, 'Five dollars a year.' "I said, 'How long have you been converted?' He said, 'I have been converted now about four years.' "Well, what did you do before you were converted?" "I was a drunkard." "How much did you spend for whiskey?" "I spent about two hundred and fifty dollars a year." "How much was your worth?" "I rented land and was ploughing a steer." "What had you been doing?" "I had got a good plantation and a pair of horses."

"Well, said I, 'you paid the devil $250 a year for the privilege of ploughing a steer, and now don't want to give God five dollars a year for ploughing horses. You are a rascal from the crown of your head to the sole of your foot.' There are a great many people that way. I have never known the Lord bankrupt a man yet, have never seen a man that couldn't do better, every thing being equal, as a Christian than a sinner.—Sam Jones.

AMONG THE MAGYARS. (Hungarians.) A HUNGARIAN PUSZTA. BY DR. FRANK S. MILBERT. LETTER NO. 3.

During my stay in Vienna I have made many pleasant acquaintances among the Hungarians, (Magyars, Russians, etc.) I found the Southern Germans and Hungarians among the most genial and hospitable of Europeans, open-hearted, always ready to do one a good turn. Among my fellow countrymen I fell in with a jolly good chap—a Hungarian from near Buda-Pesth—capital of Hungary—with whom I became very intimate, and in August he persuaded me to accompany him on a visit to his father's "Puszta." Consequently on a beautiful morning at 7 a. m. we embarked on a steamer and were soon out on the bosom of the noble Danube flowing towards the Hungarian frontier where we arrived at 7 p. m., after a most interesting and pleasant trip. We put up at an hotel, had a good night's rest, and next forenoon got a glimpse of this beautiful spot. At 1 p. m. we took the train and after a short journey from Buda-Pesth arrived at a quiet, interesting country, arrived at our destination in, rather at the station nearest my friend's home, where we were met by a young man, who was a great help to us, and drove him through miles of dust (dusty roads we cannot say, for there are no roads). This dust is indescribable, it must be seen to be believed, through which one deep down into it, and one wonders how the horses can get along; one fondly thinks that perhaps after rain the state of things becomes better, but never.

After a delay of rain the roads—shall I call them roads for want of another term?—are exactly as they were before, with the exception of pieces which are a little lower than the surrounding country, and there the water collects, presenting the appearance of a small lake, through which one plunges one horse, wading, emerging from them into the dust and sand again, as though the transition from the flood to Sahara were a matter of every day occurrence.

Before I go further, I must tell you what a "Puszta" is. It is a vast prairie farm—and this phase of country-life is marked by surprising contrasts. The country is very fertile, yielding anything which can enter the imagination of those who picture to themselves great and fertile lands, winding rivers, fertile hills, and thick woods, and a great number of villages, and churches, or the neat country houses and people we see in noble New Brunswick. The more I see of the world, the more I think of the great beauty of our own country. One is naturally led to think in such a soil nothing can grow, but curious as it may appear, every thing thrives remarkably in this sandy growth, is usually rich and fertile. There are harvests here of corn, wheat, and quality, rarely fall to our lot in Canada. I took pleasure in wandering through the golden corn-fields, and was amazed at the amount and size of the fruit of all kinds which grows almost wild; the melon fields show are a sight to see farther than the eye can reach the ground is covered with thousands of melons of all kinds and sorts; some no larger than oranges, whilst others are as large as a man can scarcely lift a single one. The water-melon forms the principal food of the Hungarian peasant; in the season he eats scarcely anything else, indeed in the great heat of summer on the Puszta, everybody finds a water-melon, which has been kept in a cool place, the greatest possible refreshment, as the country is so hot, and every estate is almost invariably, scarcely any member of the family considering his meal complete without his melon. The tobacco plant is also cultivated with great success. The internal arrangements of my friend's household was similar to that of an English country-house. There is the conventional household, consisting of the most important person, with the establishment, the fat cook, and all the various men and maids; the attire of the interior female servants is of the most respectable and neat; but starting to the unaccustomed eye, they wear the short Hungarian peasant dress, but invariably got about with bare arms, legs and feet; indeed very few of them possess shoes and stockings, they consider those superfluous articles of dress; all the various workers on the estate, gardeners, farm laborers, and others, together with their wives and children, amount to a considerable number, and owing to the great distance from any village or town, they form a kind of community over which their master rules as a prince. He has the full right to settle discipline, to administer punishment where he considers it necessary, and his decision runs at all times be accepted as law; consequently he has in his hands a great power for good or for evil; and where he has the interests of his fellow creatures at heart, he provides a school master to teach their children to see many ways promotes their happiness and welfare; the greatest joy he can afford them is on a late-day or holiday which happened during my visit, he had a grand affair, where he arrived with their musical instruments, placed themselves in a field, and the whole afternoon and evening till dark, play duos
