Keep shead of the world if you can, my boy, 'Tis the only sure way to succeed; To the spot where you once had the lead; And there's no way to win in the battle of So easy, so safe and so sure. As to have a few dollars ahead of your wants-For most of life's ills 'tis the cure.

But you never get dollars till first you get pence As from acorns the mighty oaks grow; Work hard, and work ever, and save as you toil No matter if progress seems slow; Thus be true to yourself in the years of And you'll rest without worry when old, Save the pennies to-day, into silver they'll turn, And the silver will grow into gold.

Let the fool try to tempt you to pleasures to-day That will take the small coin from your purse; Store your brain, in the hours they give to the With knowledge, you'll not be the worse; For labor, and study, and saving in youth Will give rest and content when you're old. And the pennies to-day will be silver full soon,

And the silver will grow into gold.

Fair Italy lies on the Alps' farther side, Tis the place we have dreamed of always, But those Alps must be climbed by the stout limbs of youth Ere by Tiber we pass age away: So work, my brave boy, in the years of your

CUPID ON JACOB'S LADDER

'What a migratory person Jacob must have been-quite equal to the Queen of Scots-his ladders are legion!' I murmured thoughtfully to myself, as I climbed the sunny slope, well bearded with birch and haxel, that leads to the top of Jacob's

Ladder, Campsie Glen. I gained the summit, and sank down thankfully into a mossy chair, which with its "green elastic cushion, clasped within the oak-tree's root, made for me a chair of silence, very rare and absolute.' I was struggling back into health after a tedious illness, and bad, a fortnight before, gladly exchanged Hertfordshire. with its great furzy commons, for wild romantic Campsie Glen, where I was

It was Saturday afternoon, and I sat enjoying to the full my leafy seclusion, embowered as I was among birch and herel bushes, until, listening to the deep equal to this in number of inhabitants fullaby music that rose from the ravine where the river leaped over its rocky barriers, I fell fast asleep. I was aroused, not suddenly, but gradually, by the sound of merry voices, singing, talking, and laughing, immediately below, and understood in a moment that one or more the many Saturday picnic parties to Campsie Glen had invaded the stillness love, confidence, devotion, unselfishness, my great retreat.
