A good story is told of a man who wanted some stumps removed from his meadow. He wrote as snonymous letter to a neighbor, with whom he was not friendly, stating that when a young man be had helped rob his grandfather of a large sum of money, £500 of which was buried under the roots of a tree in the meadow in queetion, giving good reasons why he himself had not recovered the money. On the night of the receipt of the letter, the stumps were all dug up and ready so be barned.

Mr. Blair's Controverted Election amendment bill has passed both houses by a good majority, after an amendment to the 6th section. The amendment somewhat modifies the original, but the Act as a whole will not, we fear, recommend itself to public favor. We agree with the principle of punishing all, whether successful or not, who are guilty of corrupt practices at elections, but to make the guilt of the unanocessful establish the equally guilty suc. | candidate in his seat does seem repugiant to all sense of right. Better far, we think, to do away with all law on the matter and let the majority of the popular vote, Lowever secured, decide the elections, without protest.

in England, protection is regarded as a discarded falacy, in favor of a return to which there is no practical desire, while, in the United States, half the nation, probably, regard protection as an absolute necessity. In a young country like Canada, of course, there are elements which afford argument in favor of protection, which in the older countries do not exist.
