The hand that once to me gave thrill,

Gives now, instead, an icy chill! "Why is it?" The name that once to me had charm, Now almost fills me with alarm!

The eye that once its lustre poured, With brightness is no longer stored! "Why is it?"

The form that once to me had grace,

"Why is it?"

Has now, as such, no longer place! "Why is it?" The intellect that shone so bright, To me has fallen 'neath shades of night! "Why is it ?"

"Why is it?" I often hear you ask: To answer this would be a task! So we with pen and thought refrain-True, or untrue, let it remain!

In Memory of Mrs. A.W. Clark. Lines written on the death of Mrs. A W. Clark, who died at Gord nsville, Carleton Co, March

And can it be that Emma's gone The one we did so love; She has exchanged the scenes of earth For brighter ones above. After long and painful suffering, Which she bore with Christian faith,

That cruel hand was laid upon her-The cruel hand of death. And when she knew that she must die, And from this world be free, She cried, "Oh, death where is thy stir

Oh, grave where is thy victory! And as the spirit left the form
Of that fair and lovely child,
She turned her eyes to Heaven—
'She looked,' and Emma smiled.

Smiled as she passed from this dark wor To greater worlds on high, Where she is drinking in the joys, With Jesus in the sky. Why should we weep for Emms then? We know she is at rest,

With all the ransomed of the earth, And all that God has blessed. Look up, dear husband; do not mourn; On Christ thy sorrows cast,

For He can calm the heaving sea And still the raging blast. Your sorrow seems too deep for tears-Your spirit almost crushed-Think of the agony of Christ, And let your moans be hushed

The joy for which we sigh;
'Tis not the whole of life to live,
Nor all of death to die.

He lives, "the great Redeemer lives." One word of comfort, friend: Our cause can never, never fail— On Him our hopes depend. Then think of Emma as not dead, But gone to a life above, Unmeasured by the flight of years—And all that life is love.
