SAMUEL & JAMES WATTS,

A Song of the Thankful Time.

We think of Thanksgiving at seeding time:— In the swelling, unfolding, budding time, When the heart of Nature and hearts of men Rejoice in the Earth grown young again. We dream of the harvest, of field and vine, And graineries full, at Thanksgiving time. We think of Thankegiving in growing time:-

With fruitage, with grain and with sweets dis When the dream of hope is a truth sublime, Then our hearts make room for the thankful

We think of Thanksgiving in harvest time:——
In the yielding, gathering, golden time;
When the sky is fringed with a hazy mist,
And the blushing maples by frost-lips kissed;
When the barns are full with the harvest cheer And the crowning, thankful day draws near. We think of Thanksgiving at resting time:—
The circle completed is but a chime
In the song of life, in the lives of men!
We harvest the toil of our years, and then We wait at the gate of the King's highway,
For the dawn of our soul's Thanksgiving Day.

THE VOICE THAT WON HIM.

The Elms before night.

The speaker, a handsome, dark-eyed young man, who sat his horse like a centaur, turned to the left, where a narrow road or bridal-path was visible among the trees, and rode rapidly onward. The sun was setting, and its last rays streamed in crimson splendor over the greenwood scene. Alan Earle was lost in thought as his horse galloped rapidly onward, and his meditations ran something in this fashion.

'I shall soon see my beautiful Alma! Strange, that I should be in love with a woman whom I have never seen, and of whom I know nothing save that she is the daughter of Colonel Thornton of The Elms, and her photopraph shows that she is perfectly beautiful! To be sure, Colonel Thornton is my father's Opthalmic and Aural Surgeen to St. the Thorntons were strangers to John Gen. Public Hospital. How well I remember it all! But this is a very strange road! Why it has come to an abrupt termination! I declare must have lost my way!'

Lost his way, indeed! That was about the truth, and even as he hesitated which way to turn, his horse decided the matter by a sudden misstep. There was plunge forward, a crash, a dull thud, and all was silence. He had ridden too close to the edge of a rocky ravine of whose neighborhood he was ignorant, and horse and rider had gone over and lay a huddled heap below upon the dead leaves and underbrush.

'How providential that we came this way, Alma dear! 'Don't 'Alma dear' me!' cried a harsh voice. 'For my part I wish that we had never come; and if his errand here is to try and please me, he may as well go home again! Why, you know papa heard only to-day that the Earles are ruined! 'Stop! Good heavens! that is the voice now-singing. Listen?' There floated upon the silence of the evening a sweet, exquisitely clear voice singing 'The Last Rose of Summer;' a moment later a slight figure turned into the golden path and Allan Earle sprang forward in involuntary surprise.
