Walter Besaut's second paper on London deals with the Saxon and Norand was in the act of fastening the kitchen paper on London deals with the Saxon and Norman periods, and presents many interesting facts relative to the customs, trades occupations, religious faith, and daily life of the people of the metropolis during those times. Numerous illustrations of monuments, churches, arms, and seals, and other remains of that period, enhance the value of this important article. The and was in the act of fastening the kitchen door when a brilliant flash and peal of thun der came and burst open both doors. The electricity seized a dipper which Miss Maw held in her band, and suatched the bowl off one end of the handle and the ring from the other. The bare handle was left in the young lady's hand.

The Bishop of Durham has written a letter for publication, in which he says that the "universal instinct towards dramatic representations appears to show that the theatre answers to the natural and right desire." The Bishop adds: "The only rule I can offer or follow is whether or not a particular amusement helps me in my work. If so, it is, in my opinion, a blessing divinely sant.
