Poetry.

Sir John's Favorite Poem. The following poem by Rev. Father Ryan, the poet of the Confederate States, who is now dead, was the favorite poem of Sir John Macdonald:—

My feet are weary, and my hands are tired, My soul oppressed—
And I desire what I have long desired— Rest-only rest.

'Tis hard to toil-when toil is almost vain, In barren ways; In harvest days.

The burden of my days is hard to bear, But God knows best; Barrister-at-Law And I have prayed, but vain has been my praye For rest—sweet rest. 'Tis hard to plant in Spring and never reap, The Autumn yield; 'Tis hard to till, and 'tis hard to weep

O'er fruitless field. F. B. CARVELL | And so I cry, a weak and human cry, So heart oppressed; And so I sigh, a weak and human sigh, For rest-for rest.

> And cares infest My path, and, through the flowing of hot tears, I pine-for rest. And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er;

For, down the West, Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore Where I shall rest. Judge of Probate. Clerk of the Circuit and County | 'Twas always so; when, but a child, I laid

> Selegt Tale. THE TRAIN DISPATCHER.

The office clock ticked with a steady swing, the long Pendulum oscillated be tween the ends of the arc with a monot onous regularity that made one sleepy. The air was damp and chilly outside, only to make the grate a dispenser of warmth and comfort. The constant clicking at my desk relieved the lonesomeness, as sat with my thumb and two fingers or the key and my eyes on the clock dia sending the trains in security along the various lines of the road. The comfort and happiness of men women and children were intrusted to my vigilant care. The responsibility the position can only be appreciated to one who is, or has been, placed in similar position. I sat all alone with invisible glances fixed on the network of iron bands, where trains were sweeping over miles of space with lightning speed while the far reaching throb of electric power came to me from distant stations to locate every movement that guided my unerring judgement.

Every delayed train became an object of concern as it sidetracked for the regular or made up the time between long runs, thus keeping my nerves up to the tension which made life a constant round of duty. I looked drowsily at the clock, m

May 8th. The grounds were prepared to seat 300 persons, but failed to accommodate half that were present. Lights surrounded the entire grounds, which presented a beautiful appearance. The stage was 12x26 feet and was connected with the side of the school building, being magnificently decorated with evergreens and beautiful flowers. In front of the stage and directly over it was a beautiful arch, handsomely decorated with evergreen. The night was everything that could be wished for. He has inspired many of his pupils with a thirst for knowledge that will lead them on step by step until they may be fitted for places which they will be called to fill in the future. Energy and enterprise still lead Prof. Seely on; he has already perfected his plans for teaching a subscription school at the Green school house, session to open in July with sixty scholars, which will necessitate another assistant. May he live long and prosper.
