Since the men went out they have been very ugly, refusing to allow the company to bring in new men, stopped the pumps and the tens advertisements which have been among until there was danger of the mines blowing up. They paraded the streets heavily arm ed, threatening death to anyone who should attempt to assist the company. On Friday, Sheriff Gunnison arrived with twenty five men for the purpose of guarding the mines.
They were attacked by about two hundred armed Sicilians and Austrians, who began firing with their Winchester rifes. The men returned the fire and five Italians and two Austrians were fatally wounded. After firing the miners retreated and the sheriff's
