Poetry.

In Memoriam
Isabella and Emma Mackintosh, Glasgowie, died
June 19th and June 21st, 1888.

Ye are gone to the realms above,
No sin, no sorrow to know—
Ye are gone to the nation's love,
To Thy will, Oh Father we bow.
Your infant days were fair,
Like flowers in virgin bloom—
As flowers that blossom here,
Ye seek to an early tomb.

No longer with heart-breaking sigh,
We murmur each fond cherisher name,
Our babes, wreathed with glory on high,
Are hushing the Song of the Lamb.

This beautiful faith, which charms,
The Saviour bath sweetly given—
"O! innocents, come to my arms—
"O! angels, come to the Kingdom of Heaven."
—Marchmont.

Select Tale.

THE CARLYON TRAGEDY.

Just the two men composed the family at Carlyon Hall, and a gay, wild life they led. Not that they were much together, or that good-will inclined them to the same course. Truth to tell there was little sympathy between the two.

The elder man gave his select dinners and champagne suppers to his clique; while Ralph, his son, scoured the country for a score of miles about with choice spirits of the Carlyons.

The fall itself was a patched-up pile of ruinous masonry. The Carlyons for three generations back had proved a spendthrift race; and their once ample patrimony had dwindled down to a few barren acres, with a village of miserable houses, which yielded the sole income of the present proprietor. Still he could boast a long descent, and we all know how far an illustrious pedigree will go towards propelling a falling house.

This was the state of affairs when Mrs. Mondeville came down from town with a half-dozen servants at her back, and pretty Bertha Mondeville, her very reluctant companion.

Bertha was the lady's youngest daughter, and besides the generous portion of Mondeville property destined to fall to her share, had good prospects of an inheritance from a certain wizened, eccentric old woman who had stood godmother to her at her christening eighteen years before.

With such expectations, and possessed of natural attractions which drew hosts of sighing lovers to her feet, it was certainly reprehensible in her to give preference to one far beneath her in the social scale. At least, so reasoned her lady mother. But Bertha was wilful, and maternal restrictions went for naught. She had given her heart and promised her hand to Henry Bernard, the struggling artist, who as yet was quite unknown to both fame and fortune. He was sanguine, though, and Bertha no less so. She reposed the utmost confidence in his genius, and ultimate success, while he, too, with renewed energy for his triumphal wreath, knowing that his lady mother was involved in the result of his effort.

But here Mrs. Mondeville interposed. Her wrath fell harshly upon her daughter's perverse head, until, angered beyond all bounds, she had recourse to extreme measures to break off the proposed marriage. Henry Bernard was forbidden the house, and Bertha was placed under strict espionage for the time.

The Carlyons were distant relatives of the family, and Mrs. Mondeville fixed upon the Hall as a secure and retired asylum for her wayward child. So, either they had come, fast upon the track of the courteous little note of warning that announced them.

The Hall had been put in hurried order for the reception of the ladies. The remnants of plate were duly polished; the frayed damask and fine linen (evidence of decaying gentility) taken from the drawers. Carlyon cleared his domain of bachelor guests, and met them with courtesy ease which distinguishes gentle blood, no matter how much weighed upon by adverse circumstances.

Ralph, who was in the habit of being absent for days together, knew nothing of the proposed advent, and surprised himself not a little by coming home to find such an unprecedented party established there.

Mrs. Mondeville endured a week in the dreary, solitary place, and then went away, leaving Bertha and a loyal-eyed maid to the hospitable charge of the Carlyons.

It was not a pleasant duty for the latter to assume, and for a time they regretted the necessary suspension of their reckless pleasures. Not that either reformed even temporarily, but the Hall could no longer be thrown open to bon comrades and nightly orgies. They clung to their customary habits, but unused to the trouble of concealment, chafed against the household which common courtesy imposed upon them.

This state of things did not continue long, however. Bertha's cheery young presence brought a flood of sunshine into the dreary old house, such as it had not known for years. The grim, dark rooms held attractions for their inmates which they had not hitherto possessed.

Certainly, in removing her daughter from the influence of one lover, Mrs. Mondeville had not meant to subject her to the importunities of two. Carlyon, drawn perhaps by the visions of the ample dowry destined for her, and Ralph—base as he was—actually touched with an approximation of noble sentiment were both numbered among her devotees.

Bertha's position was becoming extremely unpleasant. A note, smuggled out, despite the watchfulness of the maid, brought no response from Henry Bernard. Her mother remained unmoved by her urgent entreaties for a speedy return; and meanwhile the two Carlyons urged their individual suits with persistent ardor.

Ralph, impulsive and passionate, could wait to take no politic moves in wooing his wooing. His very earnestness would have pleased powerfully for him, had not the girl's heart and mind been filled with love and other thoughts. He came in upon her suddenly one afternoon, when he knew her to be alone.

"Is the old, old story, Bertha, that I want to tell you," he said, "I suppose I am not worthy of you—for I've been a bludge in my time—but I will make my best better when you give me the dear assurance I am waiting for. Bertha, love, come to me."

"Satan—Aren't you one of those men who frequently remark, 'It's a cold day when I get left?' Newly Arrived—'Y-e-s,' Satan—Um. What is your opinion of the present weather?"

She—When does a honeymoon suppose to end? He—When the last quarter is gone, I guess.

Keep Your Promise.
Mothers, don't destroy your children's faith in you by keeping your promises to them, no matter how trifling they may seem. The simple childish faith they place in you should be a reason, if there was no other, for keeping a promise once made. The child may doubt every one else, but will believe the word of weakness and conscious dependence, and his mother is his law and gospel. But let a child once distrust the word of his mother, and he loses forever his simple childish faith. It is a shock that the tender sensibilities never recover from, and often a cruel disquiet that makes him ultimately perhaps a cynic.—Detroit Tribune.

Satan—Aren't you one of those men who frequently remark, 'It's a cold day when I get left?' Newly Arrived—'Y-e-s,' Satan—Um. What is your opinion of the present weather?"

She—When does a honeymoon suppose to end? He—When the last quarter is gone, I guess.

She—When does a honeymoon suppose to end? He—When the last quarter is gone, I guess.

His dark face, handsome, despite the lines dissipation had left upon it, grew tender; his eyes looked down in hers with eager, impassioned light. Bertha's heart throbbed pitifully as she realized the pain her words must inflict upon him.

"Oh, Ralph, I had hoped you might not subject me to this test! It would be cruel to give you false hope, for I can never be more than your earnest friend. Forget that you have ever cared for me, and bestow your love on some one who will make you happier than I ever could."

"Bertha! Bertha! You can't mean to leave me in utter despair? I will wait and work, and prove myself a better man than I have yet been. Only tell me that there is a chance of winning you at last!"

"It never can be, Ralph! Because—because I love another!"

The still, white rage which settled down upon his face frightened her more than if he had broken out in angry words.

"I shall not give you up nevertheless," he said, quiet but with intensity. "Give me a little hope and an equal chance, and I will try for your love by fair means; but by measures foul or fair, no other man shall ever take you from me!"

With that he turned, leaving her abruptly, as he had come, and his quick steps gave back a sharp ring from the paved walk without. At a little distance he encountered the elder Carlyon, who accosted him, timing his leisurely pace to the other's hasty strides.

"Easy, my son! I have some information which it may be best to impart at once. I happened to over-hear your conversation of a moment ago—by the way, you should never make love near open windows—and am gratified to know that Bertha holds such an important place in your estimation."

"Ah! Ralph waited, knowing that something more lay behind this suave address."

"Yes, but I must warn you against your own impetuous nature, which may lead you to extremes. As she said it is impossible for her to regard your suit with favor you had best snare address."

"May I ask why?"

"Simply because I intend to marry her myself!"

"By heaven, you shall not!"

The elder Carlyon dropped his eyelids, a trick of his when angered.

"Did you ever know me to relinquish a purpose?"

"Or me to fail in making good my words? I would kill any man ere he should thwart me, or brave me by flouting my preference."

Each read indomitable resolution in the other's face. The gauntlet was cast between them, and there-after only bitter enmity could mark their mutual relation.

A week wore heavily away. Then Ralph disappeared, went no one knew whither, and Bertha awoke to a consciousness that she was no better than a prisoner in the old Hall. The maid had been bribed to co-operate with the purpose which he had announced his purpose with a quiet steadiness of manner which would admit of no gainsaying.

With his ruthless will crushing down all obstacles in his way, and no communication with his friends permitted, save such as the distant Bertha felt that her opposition must give way before the cruel force he brought to bear upon her.

At last he gained his purpose. How he accomplished it himself and the maid knew best. But the clergyman was waiting at the church, and Bertha, worn to a shadow of her former self, with her face scarce less white than the bridal robes she wore, went trembling down the worn stairs to be wedded to the man who had so long persecuted her.

You don't want to be a drunkard. I never found a man that did; and the disappointment of men who wake up to find themselves drunkards is something so terrible, that the slightest chance of, and a pledge of total abstinence taken and kept will turn any man or woman from the path of the drunkard and the shame to which almost every man and woman is liable.

A deliberate promise is the strongest tether with which any man can bind a good purpose. You have a purpose to be sober, respectable, pure, then bind the habit of sobriety to it with a solemn promise to abstain forever from all intoxicating liquors, including wine, beer and cider, and you are safe from that danger.

The Beer Cures.
"In appearance," says the Scientific American, "the beer-drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind, will commonly provoke acute disease, ending fatally. Compared with intemperate who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more insensible and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of insensibility, closely allied to the morbid, and the most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually they are almost moribund, and they are the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, sluggish, selfish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal."

What Smoking Does for Boys.
A medical man, struck with the large number of boys under fifteen years of age who were observed smoking, was led to inquire into the effect the habit had upon the general health. He took for his purpose thirty-eight, aged from nine to sixteen, and carefully examined them. In twenty-seven he discovered injurious traces of the habit. In twenty-two there were various degrees of criminal insanity, closely allied to the morbid, and the most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually they are almost moribund, and they are the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, sluggish, selfish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal."
