The Deity.

With reverent awe my thoughts oft dwelt on the

Thou Great Eternal One the Deity!

On time exactly punctual it is run.

The Great First Cause and Origin of all

We view with wonder on this earthly ball

So fairly formed, so wondrous in design!

A mile a minute rolls the swift express, Although indeed its usual speed is less;

Without a track, unerringly, is hurled;

With dual motion, spinning, does it go

With speed to which the rifle ball is slow.

As by a string a child may whirl a ball,

l'hose balls, the planets, round the

Nor into space excentrically are hurled;

Held and propelled by a resistless force

Which force forbids a wild erratic flight,

For God Almighty reins and guides aright

That move obedient, and His orders heed.

Were they not subject to His watchful eye,

So we His goodness own and bounty share;

For should He for a space His care deny,

Nor longer round the glorious sun revolve.

No bounds to God's dominions can be set,

Thoughts furthest flight finds space beyond it yet; A space infinite, set with jewels bright,

Worlds beyond worlds, and suns to give them

Could we with speed that only thought can find, Through space proceed, and leave the world

With thoughts swift flight could we our course

Through God's vast realm, His wondrous works

Ten thousand times ten thousand years would be

O, then, how great beyond all thoughts is He Who rules throughout this vast immensity! God is Eternal, Boundless and All Wise.

Shape means proportions, bounds a finite frame, And all designs must still some author claim;

Man well is formed to live where he is placed; His soul alone is God-like, and would soak

In all God's creatures wise design is traced-

Beyond this world and other worlds explore.

For who was Author of that Great Design?

"God did Himself His form conceive," you say, Was there a time ere he was perfect?—Nay!

By God conceived and formed on earth to live-

Assigns to Mighty God like form He gave

To fickle Fortune's plaything, pet and slave! Eternal God, a creature's form—oh, fie!

'God is a spirit,' boundless and supreme,

Can ye thus meanly think of God Most High?

And hath no creature's form as you may deem

Yet if ye must so think or so believe 'Twill do no harm and but your self deceive,

For what God is, He is, and always was,

Assign Him, then, whatever form you will, God is Almighty God, thy Maker still,

Whom we should worship, honor and obey, Addressing as "Our Father" when we pray; "In spirit and in truth," 'tis meet we should

The February Wide Awake opens with a balled of heroism. When the brave Crusader ancestor of the present British Minister at Washington, Sir Julian Pauncefote, was captured by the Saracens, they demanded his wife's right hand in ransom, and the brave lady so saved her lord. Sir Julian Pauncefote supplied the author, Mary Bradley, with authentic facts. Mr. E. H. Garrett's pictures for the balled are finely dramatic. Other poems are by Elizabeth W. Bellamy and Mary E. Wilkins. The interesting illustrated articles of the number include Lieut. Fremont's timely account of "Life at Frontier Forts," and as a sort of military pend-Saturday was the last day for importers to genious plot of "Aunt Dolly's Two Robbers," Saturday was the last day for importers to remove merchandiss from bonded warehouses and best stock of MARBLE ever important dinto this County, and which we will sell theaper than the cheapest
