The Boston Journal says, editorially:—
"With the Southern countries one after another falling into the reciprocity procession, it is becoming daily of less and less consequence what Canada may do, particularly as we are steadily strengthening our present supremacy in Canadian markets without the aid of reciprocity. In 1890, Canada's oun merce with us exceeded its trade with Eagland. According to the Canadian statistics, the Dominion's imports from the United States were $52,000,000 and its exports $10,000,000 in that year. This situation is certainly one that Americane can survey with complacency. Our people do not yet appear to know whether they really do or do not want reciprocity with Canada. The farmers are against it three to one.
